In the afternoon, Col. Strangways made an inspection of the division on the officers' cricket-field, and after the usual movements, addressed a few remarks to the officers and men. He said that was the first occasion he had seen so large a body of Artillery Volunteers, and, from a close observation of their work during the week, it was quite evident to him that their heart was in it. It would be his duty to make a detailed report to the authorities, and he therefore, at present, would only allude to two points. In firing, the Nos. 1 were, generally speaking, too slow, while the reverse was the case in repository work. He commended these points to their notice, and hoped they would be improved when he next had the pleasure of seeing the Northern Division.

During the week, the Repository competition, B Shift, was carried out on the marshes, in the presence of Col. Strangways and other officers. Lieut. Thomson, R.A., acted as umpire. The operation, a difficult one, is thus described:—"A 64-pounder R.M.L. gun, on wooden, garrison, standing carriage, on Alderson's platform, has to be dismounted by watered skids down the rear; the temporary sleigh (skidding to be used for both transoms) constructed round the gun; move gun and sleigh 20 feet to the rear round a fixed point, and then 40 feet to flank; then mount gun by parbuckling over side, on another, wooden, garrison, standing carriage, on Alderson's platform, leaving gun in line of fire." Time being an important element in deciding the results, half the maximum number of marks are given for the performance of the operation in the shortest time, and the same proportion for drill and accurate observance of the exact method laid down in the Manual of Artillery Exercises, combined with strict silence and quiet working. The first prize was won by the 5th and 6th Detachments, 2nd Lancashire, 159 marks; the second by Nos. 3 and 4, 8th Lancashire, 155; and the third by Nos. 1 and 2, 2nd Lancashire, 149. Certificates were awarded to the 1st Forfar and 5th Lancashire, the latter gaining the highest number of marks for correct drill.

The division left camp yesterday morning, and proceeded by special trains from Southend to their respective destinations.

Capt. H. D. Dunlop, Royal Artillery, has been transferred from Garrison Instructor of the Home District to a similar appointment at York, in succession to Major Buxton, Inniskilling Fusiliers, and is succeeded in the London District by Major Du Vernet, 56th Essex Regt., from Garrison Instructor at Gibraltar. Capt. T. E. Stephenson, 56th Essex Regt., replaces Major Du Vernet at Gibraltar, and does not take up duty at York, as has been stated.

OUR OCCUPATION OF EGYPT.

SIR,—In your leading article on this subject of Aug. 4, you advocate the immediate withdrawal of the British troops. You state that "for all practical purposes connected with administration, they might as well be in the moon" as in Egypt; believing "that if they were withdrawn to-morrow, there would not be the least of what is called anarchy or disturbance" there, as "there are now an Egyptian Army and an Egyptian Gendarmerie and police quite capable of dealing with any elements of disorder." You say that "there can be no valid cause for keeping a costly foreign garrison in Egypt . . . . . . then clear bag and baggage out of the country. But let us protect Egypt, all the same. There will still be a British Resident and Financial Adviser at Cairo," with several British heads of departments. As to the present efficiency and discipline of the Army, we know the difficulties the British officers with the force in the Soudan have experienced with their subordinate officers and their men; how on occasions they refused to go on picket and out-post duty, especially at night, "as they might get shot." In Alexandria I have seen, what has often been noticed by other Europeans, Egyptian soldiers on guard turn out and present arms to British Staff Officers, and as soon as these had passed on make indecent and contemptuous gestures at them. The English officers of the Gendarmerie find the greatest difficulty in getting any order carried out by their Egyptian subordinates that is in any way irksome, or that entail any trouble. It will also be remembered that, in March of this year, on reducing the number of British troops in Alexandria, and replacing them at some of the guards and posts they had held by the gendarmerie, Europeans, men and women, were at once insulted and annoyed by the natives in the streets. This was checked only by their finding that the British troops had not entirely left the town. We cannot ignore altogether local opinion, I was in Egypt during and after the war, and again twice this year. I heard the same opinion expressed by all European residents that I came in contact with, of whatever nationality, in Cairo, Suez, Alexandria, and Port Said. They have no confidence that the Egyptian Army or gendarmerie can afford any security to life or property, or that the British Resident and Financial Adviser, without a show of our forces in the country, will be able to benefit the Administration, or cope with foreign and internal intrigue, any better than their predecessors before the war. They all say, "If the English troops go, we go," and it is almost certain that "if the British troops were to be withdrawn from Egypt to-morrow," there would take place as great an exodus of Europeans from the country as there was last year during the riots and massacres. Without going into the question of the French occupying Egypt on the departure of our troops, the sense of security to life and property and of support to the Administration that it affords, is surely a valid cause for keeping the present garrison there.—I am, &c.,

(FROM AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Alexandria, July 30, 1883.

The troops have been moved about so sharply that the usual general return as to the state of their health has not arrived. The following is the roll of officers and men who have died from cholera, and whose names have reached me up to the present. It shows two officers and one corporal of the Royal Artillery, one private of the Engineers, one corporal and eight privates of the Black Watch (42nd), five privates of the Cameron Highlanders (79th), one corporal and two privates of the King's Royal Rifles (60th), seven privates of the Royal Sussex (35th), one corporal and four privates of the Army Hospital Corps, two corporals and two privates of the Gordon Highlanders (75th), and one of the Ordnance Store Corps,—total, 38. Unfortunately, this is not all, for reports of 13 others have reached me without particulars.

Gordon, Gordon Highlanders, will perform duty of Garrison Adjutant and Quartermaster; Captain Cotton, of same regiment, those of Garrison Quartermaster, in place respectively of Captain and Adjutant Baynes and Quartermaster Howard, of the Camerons, who have proceeded with regiment to Mokhattam Camp.

Deputy-Commissary-General of Ordnance Russell, having completed special duties for which he has been sent to Egypt, will return to England by earliest opportunity, passage being provided from Suez.

The following officers have passed in subjects (a) and (b), section 4, paragraph 37, Queen's Regulations : —Captain R. Henley, 3rd Battalion, King's Royal Rifle Corps; Lieutenants R. S. Hunter Blair, 1st Battalion, Gordon Highlanders; E. H. Gordon, 1st Battalion, Gordon Highlanders; T. Souter, 1st Battalion, Royal Highlanders; and R. C. Strange, 6-1, Royal Artillery.

The very serious nature of the outbreak among the troops is naturally causing much comment. Assuming that to-day's returns show no improvement, 1 per cent. of the entire force will have succumbed in less than a week. Now, taking the returns for the first week at Damietta, we find 277 deaths out of a population of 34,046; making the same comparison with Mansourah, we find only 38 out of 26,784. In Cairo itself, when the disease has been declared for 15 days, the deaths are not 1 per cent. of the population. When it is remembered that these returns include men, women, and children of all ages, it may well be asked how it happens that soldiers in the prime of life should show such an enormous per-centage of loss. The argument that the native is acclimatised will not hold water, for in each quarter where the disease has declared itself in this and previous years, it has invariably been the native who has suffered. Accurate statistics are not obtainable, but the per-centage among all classes of natives is certainly ten times higher than that among European adult males, with the single exception of the English troops. There can, I think, be little doubt that a serious mistake was committed in keeping the troops in Cairo until cholera had commenced amongst them. Under ordinary circumstances and with an ordinary Government, it might, perhaps, have been hoped that care would have secured soldiers from contact with the disease; but Egyptian Governments, like epidemics themselves, defy all ordinary calculations. That a disorderly rabble from the filthiest and more infected quarter of Cairo should be let loose to run in a mob and carry infection to every quarter of the town is only precisely what might have been expected, and when General Stephenson, with those extraordinary ideas which characterise Englishmen, insisted that Government should preserve order, or he would do so, he was met, not by indignation, but simply blank astonishment on the part of the Government. A few who could carry their worn-out memories back some five or six years, alleged that there was once one Gordon Pasha in Egypt who had held similar eccentric notions as to the necessity of orders being obeyed, nay, it was even whispered that the Sirdar Evelyn Wood had been accused of heretical tendencies in the same direction, seeing that Providence had for the moment handed them over to the mercies of these eccentric barbarians. Well, if his Excellency really did want to see orders obeyed, would he kindly see to it himself? Would he and Sir Evelyn kindly take a temporary seat at the Council of Ministers, and do just what they pleased? Egypt was a free country, and a very hot one; it had recently been endowed with constitutional privileges and a choleraic epidemic, neither of which they understood. The Ministers had been led to believe that both existed in different parts of her Majesty's dominions, and had no doubt that his Excellency had more experience of them than they had. They did not wish for a moment to infer that the two stood in the relation of cause and effect, but they felt convinced that the coexistence of the two was detrimental, and they would feel grateful to his Excellency if he would relieve them of either one or the other. Personally, they had no objection to continue in office and sit in council, but it must be distinctly understood that they accepted no responsibility if the use of disinfectants and obedience to orders were enforced, as both were contrary to the usages and traditions of the country. I do not wish to allege that the Ministers addressed Generals Stephenson and Wood in these exact words, for the proceedings have been held a close secret, but a distinguished colleague of mine once very accurately reported the proceedings of a famous Congress by piecing together their utterances without the precincts of the Council Chamber. I have adopted a similar course, and though I should be sorry to say that this is what they said, I feel perfectly safe in averring that it is what they thought.

Some time ago it was reported, by no less an authority than Dr. Mackie, C.M.G., that the state of the Alexandrian slaughter-houses was a source of danger to the 46th Regiment stationed at Ramleh. The conclusion did not suit the authorities, so it was decided to consider it incorrect, and General Harman, whose visits in that direction must have been of the rarest, states that the allegation that several acres of ground in the vicinity are covered with unburied carcases, is an exaggeration. Now, I do not know what precise meaning the gallant General attaches to the word "several," but I will be more precise than Dr. Mackie, and will ask him whether he will deny that thirty acres are in this condition. I choose thirty, because it is the lowest of three estimates that have since been made,—one, "at least thirty;" another, "over fifty;" a third, "from fifty to sixty." Now, as to the danger to the 46th Regiment. Dr. Mackie's suggestion may or may not prove of value, but it is surely worthy of some other reply, seeing that the regiment is admittedly suffering severely from typhoid, that all zymotic diseases must have a local cause, and that Generals, doctors, and engineers have been at their wits' ends to find that cause. Let me give another warning. Typhoid and cholera are nearly allied, and if the epidemic gets into the 46th Regiment, the ravages are likely to be alarming. The men should be got under canvas at once.

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The week at the Camp has been quiet and uneventful, but with the advent of five battalions of Volunteers we may look for much work during the ensuing week. On Tuesday Lieutenant-General Sir A. Alison, Bart., K.C.B., inspected his command for the first time in the Long Valley. This well-known spot is no new ground for Sir Archibald, who was for four years ending 1874 A.A.G. of the Division. I believe he is the first commander of the Aldershot Division who has been previously A.A.G. at the Camp. The whole of the troops (excepting the 3rd Hussars and P Battery, 4th Brigade, R.A.) were formed up in the Valley in review order at 10.30 a.m., facing west, in one line,—Cavalry and R.H.A. on right, field batteries on left, Infantry in centre. The review was of the simplest kind; the General commanding inspected the line, after which the troops formed up and marched past, the infantry returning from the reverse flank in mass of columns, and again in line of columns. The infantry then took up their original alignment, and the mounted corps went past at the trot, and again at the gallop. The line having been re-formed, Sir Archibald and Staff advanced, and Brigadiers and Staffs were called to the front and briefly addressed by the General commanding, after which the parade was dismissed. There were present on parade 5,000 men, 900 horses, and 37 guns, including the serviceable-looking division of the mountain mule battery of 7-pounders, which attracted much attention. The strongest regiment on the ground—the 87th—marched past remarkably well, better than any other regiment present. The serried ranks and great steadiness of this battalion (which will embark for India early next month) made a great impression on those who were present. The 1st Brigade was noticeable for its weakness. The three battalions forming this brigade could not have mustered more than 750 men, about the strength of the 87th. The regiments of the 1st Brigade have been recently sending drafts to their linked battalions abroad. The 31st Regiment, in the 2nd Brigade, a fine battalion, not long home from the Mediterranean, will shortly give 250 of its best men to the 70th, in India. It is this system of "robbing Peter to pay Paul" which is eating the heart out of our home battalions, and doing an incalculable amount of mischief.

A small detachment of Military Police being now stationed at Pirbright Camp, H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has ordered that the severe restrictions which were for some time placed on the troops encamped there should be withdrawn.

The "A" (Pontoon) Troop, Royal Engineers, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Bond, proceeded by march route to Egham on Monday last, there to be encamped for a month's practice in bridging. Lieutenants Pemberton, Irvine, Sandbach, and Lindsay accompany the troop, which consists of about 200 of all ranks. Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Arthur Mackworth, Bart., R.E., at present in command of C (Telegraph) Troop, Royal Engineers, is under orders for Milford Haven, and Captain Jelf, R.E., has been ordered home from the Mediterranean to assume command of this troop. Captain Jelf is well known at the Camp, where he was adjutant of his corps for several years; his return will be welcomed by all who knew him.

The order for Lieutenant H. de H. Haig, R.E., to proceed to Ireland has been cancelled; this officer will now proceed to Chatham. Brigade-Surgeon J. J. Thompson, A.M.D., has been appointed a member of the Aldershot Local Board of Health, vice Brigade-Surgeon R. W. Carter. Captain T. W. Bennet, R.E., has been ordered to Aldershot for duty. Veterinary-Surgeon M. C. Mitchell, A.V.D., has been ordered to Limerick for duty. Assistant-Commissary-General C. Ralph, Ordnance Store Department, has been appointed a member of the Equipment and Dress Committee at Aldershot, vice Deputy-Commissary-General H. A. Russell, C.B. Surgeon-Major C. A. Atkins has assumed medical charge of the Female Hospital, during the absence on leave of Surgeon-Major T. Gillespie, M.D.

The 1st Dorset and four Provisional Battalions of Rifle Volunteers will arrive at the camp to-day (Saturday) for a week's drill with the Regulars. The strength of the five battalions will be about 3,700 of all ranks. The 1st and 2nd Provisional Battalions and 1st Dorset will be encamped on Rushmoor, and attached to the 1st Brigade; and the 3rd and 4th Provisional Battalions on Cove Common, and attached to the 3rd Brigade. The Quartermasters and Quartermaster - Serjeants arrived on Thursday to draw camp equipage, &c., and make necessary arrangements before the arrival of their corps. The 1st Scots Guards will proceed from Pirbright Camp to-day (Saturday) by special train at 3 p.m. from Brookwood Station, viâ Waterloo Junction, to Cannon Street, and march to the Tower of London, there to be stationed. A detachment of recruits will arrive from the Depôt, 84th Regiment, at Pontefract, on Wednesday next, to join head-quarters. The 3rd Hussars will not now leave Aldershot at the end of the drill season, as previously arranged, but will remain here, and with the 2nd Dragoon Guards and 13th Hussars form the cavalry brigade for the winter.

THE SHOOTING POWERS OF THE BRITISH ARMY.

SIR,—Two questions appear to be exercising the minds of both military men and civilians. One is, "Why are our soldiers such inferior shots?" the other, "What steps must be taken to improve the shooting of the Army?" It has been lately annunciated that "an army that cannot shoot, is an army that cannot fight." This is rather a strong assertion, and I should indeed be grieved to know that because the soldiers of our Army cannot, as a rule, bowl over a moving object such as a man at a distance of 1,000 or 1,200 yards, they, as a matter of course, cannot fight.* Comparing our soldiers with those of Continental armies, it will be found that they bear most favourable comparison with the foreigners, as far as their shooting qualifications are concerned; and, indeed, I do not think it braggadocio to assert that our Army, as a shooting one, is far superior to any other in Europe.† Taking the shooting powers of the Boers as a standard, our Army is a long way behind, but when it is considered that the Boers live with their guns in their hands—so to speak—and Tommy Atkins only takes his rifle out for practice once a year, it is scarcely fair to draw a comparison between the Dutchmen and the British soldiers. An old Hythe maxim laid it down that "a soldier who cannot shoot is useless, and an encumbrance to the battalion." According to the late Colonel Wilford, of Hythe celebrity, this meant that if a man could not knock over another at 800 or 1,000 yards, he was useless. I do not think the argument ever did or ever could hold water for a moment, or else the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny were events which only occurred in the brains of the contending parties, and had no place in reality. In the former war, the "Brown Bess" was the weapon in general use, and the records of Inkerman, Alma, &c., will amply testify to the death-dealing qualities of that ancient lady in the hands of the British soldiers of those days. A soldier may be a dead-shot at any distance between 100 yards and 600 yards, but beyond the latter distance he may be a mere child with a rifle in his hand; but I maintain that if a man can command the life of an enemy at any distance between those mentioned, he may be considered a most efficient soldier. If our soldiers can be made into first-rate shots up to 600 yards, an enemy on coming within that range would have but a poor time of it. At the late Easter-Monday Review, an order was promulgated prohibiting firing commencing beyond 600 yards, the authorities evidently considering that at that distance effective firing should begin. Long-distance shooting is, no doubt, a very essential matter, as it will, of course, frequently be necessary to fire with effect into bodies of cavalry or to silence a troublesome battery of artillery; but, as a matter of fact, it is not absolutely necessary for every soldier to be able to tumble-over a man or a horse at 800 or 1,000 yards. Just previous to the assembling of the Committee over which Sir D. Lysons presided, I forwarded to them my opinions upon the subject of Musketry, and I am aware that they were well received and duly considered. Amongst other recommendations, I suggested the necessity for there being in every battalion a picked company of marksmen, the men to be selected from the best shots of the other companies, and that special privileges, consistent with the exigencies of the service, be given to them. Of course, I am aware that at first the commanders of those companies from which the men are selected would be very sore, but, as very great emulation would be excited amongst the soldiers to win a place in the marksmen's company, I think it follows that this company could very easily be maintained at its full strength, and yet leave a fair average of good shots in the other companies. I believe that, could such an arrangement as that suggested be carried out, the happiest results in time of war would ensue. A brigade, upon taking the field, would be enabled to command the services of three or four strong companies of crack shots, and there might be occasions when a concentrated fire from these men would go a long way towards deciding the issue of a battle. A regiment of eight hundred or a thousand picked marksmen in each division of an Army Corps would be no mean addition to its fighting strength. The writer has on more than one occasion heard the commanding officer give positive orders to the captains to allow of no delay whatever to take place in getting the course over, as the men are urgently required for parade purposes, and to be worked up for the General's annual inspection. Most commanding officers prefer to have their battalions in a high state of proficiency as far as drill is concerned, and if they can combine first-class shooting with perfection in drill and interior economy, then are they in the seventh heaven of bliss; but if they cannot have both qualifications, of the three they prefer the first. A change, however, has now come over the spirit of affairs. The appointments of musketry instructors and serjeant-instructors have been abolished, and captains of companies are held responsible for the drill and general efficiency of their respective commands. As regards the musketry officer, the appointment might, without injury to the service, have been done away with any time in the last five years, or even more; but it is a serious question whether a wise thing has been done in abolishing the serjeant-instructor, and I am certain ere many months have passed strong representations from commanding officers for their reappointment will be made. Each company of a battalion is to be struck off all duties for six weeks. During this period it is to be exercised in musketry, company drill, minor tactics, and other things far too numerous to mention, and officers will be closely watched and catechised, and woe betide the individual who allows himself to come under the censure of the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief! It is quite a novel invention, this new system of educating officers in their duties, and although at first it will be very irksome to many of them, yet if persevered in a very marked change will be perceived. There is no doubt but that as soon as an officer obtains his commission and has passed his drills and taken his place as a duty officer, his military books are relegated to the shelves of his barrack cupboard, and until within a few days of the General's inspection they never see daylight. Indeed, the writer can assert as a positive fact that often when young officers have been suddenly called upon to produce certain military books, they have been obliged to rush into the town and purchase them from the nearest stationer. Under the new régime, however, all company officers will for at least six weeks in every year be compelled to make themselves fully conversant with the contents of their military books. I strongly suggested to the Committee upon Musketry the necessity which existed for rifle clubs to be established in each regiment, and for every encouragement to be given to the men to join them. Whether this has been acted upon, I am unable to say. In my opinion, I consider that the annual course of musketry commences at too early a date in the year. The month of April is usually a bitterly cold one, and many a soldier is forced into hospital from having to stand for hours upon a mountain musketry range, or in a marsh situated in the valley of the Thames, or in a bleak Irish bog. There are only a few really good ranges in the United Kingdom. I would abolish the system of firing at a fixed object by soldiers who have gone through one or more courses; and marksmen, except when firing for their club prizes, should commence their musketry course of practice at moving objects at 900 or 1,000 yards. Only recruits, and soldiers going through their company annual course for the first time, should commence firing from 150 yards. I consider that the system under which companies of a regiment compete with one another, or regiments with regiments, most faulty and unfair. For instance, a company commences its firing some time in April, and may be kept in front of a target for hours during the most inclement weather. Another company will commence its course in the height of summer, and a high figure of merit is nearly sure to be the result, and perhaps that company becomes the crack-shooting one of the battalion. Also, in like manner a battalion in India or the Colonies may calculate pretty certainly upon having splendid weather for their annual course, whilst the other battalion will most likely be shivering in a snowstorm upon some exposed musketry range. My idea is that regiments in India and the Colonies should compete for the Army prize as a distinct Army, and that the home forces should compete with each other for a home prize. In fact, there should be two Army prizes, one for the troops in the United Kingdom, the other for the foreign one. In competing for regimental and company prizes, I would suggest that at the termination of the annual course, the marksmen of each company (including officers and non-commissioned officers) be put through a couple of days' position and aiming drill, and then all fire upon the same day for the battalion prize. For the company prize, I would take the marksmen of each company, the best shot of each section and subdivision, and let them fire for the prize under the same circumstances. By this method, I believe, greater satisfaction would be given to the soldiers, as they would then know that they were competing on very equal grounds. At the risk of giving offence to the soldiers of the Army, I would suggest that the Army prize be done away with, and a handsome prize be given to the best shooting regiment of the service, to be held by each battalion for one year. Should the regiment continue at the head of the list for three years, then the prize to belong absolutely to the battalion. As an instance of how unequally the different regiments of our service compete for prizes, I may state that in 1880 I superintended the garrison musketry instruction. Three regiments commenced on the same day, and two of them actually completed not only the drilled soldier's course, but a batch of recruits each, before the third had finished its fifth company. The latter regiment produced the best shot of the Army. In two of the regiments, hurry was the rule; in the last, the greatest care and deliberation.—I am, &c.,

COASTGUARD CUTTERS.

There are still in the Coastguard service several representatives of the old revenue cruiser. These are cutters, with crews varying from 15 to 30 men, in charge of a chief officer. As a protection to the revenue if smuggling was rife, they would in these days be useless. They are used now for removing Coastguards and their families, conveying stores, and for carrying Coastguards to and from the district ships annually. The Coastguardsmen complain, and not without reason, against being thus conveyed to and from their stations by sailing vessels. It has frequently occurred that the men have been detained on board these vessels, knocking about the coast, for the space of three weeks. They are, and not rarely, too, overcrowded, and some time ago typhus fever broke out in one of these vessels while having a batch of Coastguards on board. She put into a remote harbour, and while undergoing quarantine, the coastguards and part of the crew were landed on a sandy beach at the foot of a big mountain, for exercise for some hours. This excited the suspicion of the natives, and a rumour going forth that the vessel was from foreign parts with a malignant disease on board, the next time the men landed the natives, armed with every conceivable weapon, assembled to the number of some hundreds, prepared to drive their unwelcome visitors into the sea. The officer in charge, however, considered, under the circumstances, discretion the better part of valour, and with his men expeditiously took to the boats, and did not again trouble to visit the territory of the excited natives. While on board these vessels the men are not supplied with hammocks, and have to sleep in their clothes on the deck. The result is, that when they are over a few days on board, they reach their destination with soiled uniform, sore sides, and a disheveled appearance which would lead a person not acquainted with the circumstances to believe that they were most untidy. What the men feel most aggrieved about is having one shilling per day stopped from them in lieu of provisions, while they are thus knocked about. A man-of-war's man not unfrequently feels rather squeamish on board a cutter in rough weather, and it is unpleasant to find a shilling stopped for food for occasions when the smell of it was quite enough for him. What benefit the employment of these vessels are to the service it would be hard to ascertain. One steamer would do the work of three of them in much less time, and be a saving to the country and to the men of the Coastguard, in whose conveyance they are chiefly employed. It is no benefit to the country to have Coastguardsmen beating about the coast in these little vessels in the manner previously described, and to the men themselves it occasions loss and does them harm. The employment of a few extra gunboats for picking up the men could easily be managed, and it would obviate the hardships which the men not unfrequently have to endure on board the cutters. If this is not feasible, some kind of sleeping accommodation other than a convict's bed should be immediately made in the vessels employed in conveying Coastguardsmen about the coast, which would of itself be an improvement on the present state of things.

PAYMASTERS, R.N.

SIR,—There are 29 Paymasters unemployed who have cause to complain of the injustice of the recent appointment of Mr. S. W. Parker, as Paymaster to the Alexandra. This officer has been serving in the Duncan since Jan. 1, 1881, and in the ordinary course of events should have vacated that ship, to half-pay, on Jan. 1, 1884. A paymaster when placed on half-pay usually visits Whitehall to ask for further employ. He is told, "Oh, Mr. —— their Lordships have made a rule that paymasters are to remain at least six months on half-pay." This, I suppose, is to enable them to get rusty and behind the times, especially as no Departmental Circulars are supplied to the unemployed, by which they can keep up their knowledge, so as to be efficient officers, when ordered to take charge of a newly commissioned ship. An equally glaring case of unjust selection was that of Paymaster Ramsay, who was removed from the Revenge before his three years expired, and sent direct to the Northampton. Such strange treatment goes far to cause great discontent in a Branch which has every reason to know it has no friends at Whitehall. A slur has been cast on qualified officers, who naturally and rightly expect any vacancies in ships abroad. I do not believe that Sir Frederick Richards is aware of what has been done, as regards the cases I bring to your notice, but I suppose we must grin and bear it, for there appears no system at Whitehall for relieving officers or ships, in fact, there is at present rather more muddle than usual on the side of our incompetent rulers, the permanent Clerks. —I am, &c.,

PAYMASTER, R.N.

Captain Sir George Nares, K.C.B., accompanied by the Hydrographer to the Admiralty, and Lieut.-Col. Smith, R.E., Director of Admiralty Works, have been inspecting the east coast of Scotland, with a view of selecting a site for a harbour of refuge to be constructed by convict labour. It is supposed that the harbour of Wick will be the site chosen.

Orders have been received at Chatham for the completion of iron and steel armoured ships building at that yard. They are to be pushed forward with all dispatch, and an additional sum of £12,000 has been granted by the Admiralty for wages for this purpose.

The prizes at the Royal Naval Female School, St. Margaret's, Twickenham, were distributed on the 26th ult., by Lady Emma Baring, in the presence of a numerous assembly of the parents of the pupils and friends of the school.

On Tuesday the Coastguardmen of the Ballycastle Division, who had been away on their summer's cruise, were landed by H.M.'s cutter Stag, and on the same day the Victoria landed the men of the Pullendiva, Sligo, and Killybegs Divisions. They were transferred on Sunday at Tarbert from the Valiant district ship to the cutters, and being favoured with a fair wind made a quick passage.

The Army.

11th Hussars. Major A. C. F. FitzGeorge is to be an extra A.D.C. to Lieut.-Gen. Sir A. Alison, at Aldershot.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Col. A. K. Rideout, Royal Artillery, has been appointed to the command of the Royal Artillery in the Guernsey and Alderney District, in succession to Lieut.-Col. J. M. Burn, R.A., who joins the B Brig. Royal Horse Artillery, at Woolwich.

Scots Guards. Major-Gen. G. W. Higginson, C.B. (commanding the Home District), who was accompanied by Col. the Hon. Paul S. Methuen, C.B., and other members of the Horse Guards Staff, made an official inspection of the 2nd Batn. Scots Guards at Wellington Barracks, St. James's Park, on Saturday morning. The battalion, which was drawn up in eight companies, presented a smart appearance. The inspecting officer, who was received with a general salute, at once proceeded to make a close inspection of the ranks, and the men were afterwards put through a series of manœuvres. Gen. Higginson then visited the barracks and orderly rooms, and before leaving congratulated the officers on the discipline of the battalion. Lieut. Cutlar-Fergusson, at present serving on the Staff of Lieut.-Gen. Stephenson in Egypt, is to be an A.D.C. to Lieut.-Gen. Sir A. Alison, at Aldershot.

ROYAL MARINES.

Lieut.-Col. A. H. H. Walsh, Royal Marine Light Infantry, who has been serving as second-in-command at Walmer Depôt, has been selected by the Admiralty for the appointment of Assistant-Adjutant-General to the corps, which has fallen vacant by the retirement of Col. Sir Francis W. Festing, R.M.A., whose term of office has expired. Lieut.-Col. Walsh took up the duties of his appointment on Thursday.

77th Middlesex Regiment. It is, perhaps, not generally known that three distinct regiments have been successively numbered as the 77th Foot,—two of them Highland corps, and the third English, the present 2nd Batn. Duke of Cambridge's Own (Middlesex). The histories of the first and last well deserve writing, as observed in our previous notice. The first corps to bear the number was the 77th Highlanders, raised, in Jan. 1757, by Major the Hon. Archibald Montgomery, who afterwards became eleventh Earl of Eglintoun. He died a General and col. of the Scots Greys in 1796, when the Eglintoun title passed to a collateral branch. In 1757, he appears to have been a high-spirited young man, with a strong dash of romance in his disposition, and a great favourite in the Highlands, where he was well known. In a few weeks he got together an excellent body of men, forming thirteen companies of 105 rank and file each, who rendezvoused at Stirling. The regiment, with its quota of officers and serjeants and 30 pipers, numbering in all 1,460 of all ranks, embarked at Greenock for Halifax, N.S., in the spring of the same year, and served under Gen. Forbes in the expedition against Fort du Quesne (afterwards Pittsburg) in 1758, in which arduous undertaking it lost 7 officers and 97 men killed and 9 officers and 211 men wounded. All through the subsequent operations in the Canadas up to the surrender of Montreal and afterwards the regiment was incessantly employed in the backwoods, against the French irregulars and their Indian allies. Portions of the regiment were also employed at St. John's, Newfoundland, at the capture of Martinique in 1761, and at the siege and conquest of the Havannah in 1762. During these services Montgomery's Highlanders lost 11 officers, 5 serjeants, 2 pipers, and 110 men killed, and 14 officers, 9 serjeants, 4 pipers, and 259 men wounded. At the peace of 1763, the regiment was ordered to be disbanded, and the officers and men who desired to settle in America received grants of land. The name of the regiment yet lives in some of the many Montgomeries of backwoods topology. Not a few of these settlers afterwards served in the old 84th Royal Highland Emigrants, in the American War of Independence, among them Alan Maclean, the colonel of the Royal Emigrants, who had been a captain in Montgomery's. The story of Montgomery's Highlanders is replete with strange and romantic incident, and now that so much trouble has been taken in unearthing historic documents, both French and English, relating to the conquest of the Canadas, materials for it are by no means lacking. The next 77th was the Athol Highlanders, raised at Perth, in 1778, by Col. J. Murray, uncle of the then Duke of Argyll. Col. Murray, who had been an officer of the BlackWatch, died a General and colonel of the 72nd Highlanders in 1794. The men were enlisted for the continuance of the war only, and the services of the regiment were chiefly confined to Ireland. It was disbanded in 1783. The present, or rather late, 77th was one of the regiments raised in 1787, pursuant to an agreement with the East India Company to augment the number of King's troops in India, and to relieve the Hanoverian regiments there serving. The colonel of the new 77th was Gen. Marsh, who had been colonel of the 43rd in the old American War; and among the officers who raised men for it were Bulstrode Whitelocke, who became lieutenant-colonel, and who, after gallant service in St. Domingo, ended his professional career so disastrously at Buenos Ayres; and James Dunlop, of Dunlop, who had been an officer in the old 80th Royal Edinburgh, and afterwards commanded a brigade of the 5th Division in the Peninsula, and who was notable as one of the very few veterans of the old American War who held any command in the Duke's Peninsular Army. The late Sir Archibald Campbell, who commanded in the first Burmese War, also obtained his first commission by bringing 20 recruits to the regiment, when raising at Chatham. He was afterwards adjutant. The regiment went to Bombay in the spring of 1788, but was afterwards transferred to Madras, and served in Lord Cornwallis's campaigns of 1790-92, including the first siege of Seringapatam; at the capture of Ceylon; in the Mysore Campaign of 1799, including the storming and capture of Seringapatam; and in minor operations without number. Of its subsequent services in the Peninsula, where it formed part of Picton's Division, and in the Crimea, it is needless to speak here.

Memorandum.

Hon. Lieut.-Col. F. S. Stoney, retired pay, late Major Royal Artillery, has been permitted to commute his retired allowance (July 14).

A contemporary states that since the breaking-out of glanders among the horses of the 3rd Hussars at Aldershot, about 18 animals, valued at £1,000, have been shot.

The death, in his 65th year, is announced of Sir John Rivett-Carnac, Bart., at Winchester on the 4th inst. The late baronet was born on August 10, 1818. He served in the 73rd, 98th, and 21st Regiments, was military secretary to his father, and was a deputy-lieutenant and justice of the peace for Hants. Sir John is succeeded by his son, James Henry Sproule, born in 1846, late of the 73rd Regiment, and now in her Majesty's Civil Service.

Cholera.—Appalling as are the reports from Egypt, how few think of our enormous annual sacrifice of valuable lives from scarlet fever, measles, and small-pox. All heads of families should insist upon the daily use, in bed-room, bath-room, and nursery, of Wright's Coal Tar Soap, the only true and simple preventive of infectious disease, and a certain cure of all disorders of the skin.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1883.

LEAVE to Naval Officers for recreation on shore, after the performance of their duties on board, "is an indulgence." According to the Queen's Regulations, the Captain "may grant" leave of absence to officers, and it necessarily follows that, at his own discretion, he may not grant the indulgence when craved. Indeed an Admiralty letter, dated February 1, 1864, distinctly lays down that for a captain to refuse leave to officers is not contrary to the provisions of the Naval Discipline Act. But it appears to us most strange that the Admiralty should continue to allow commanding officers so great a latitude in this all-important question, as it directly affects the comfort and good order of every ship in the service. True, things have greatly altered, and that for the better, during the past ten years, and the vexatious refusals which so often occurred in days past, are now seldom heard of. A correspondent serving in the Channel Squadron, however, calls our attention this week, in a letter which will be found in another column, to the state of things existing on board the six ships under the command of Vice-Admiral Sir William Dowell, K.C.B. It appears that three different modes of asking leave obtain on board those ships. In two, the Ward-room Officers are not required to ask leave to go on shore for the day after they have performed their duty. In three, "leave-boards" are in use, on which the officer absenting himself from the ship for a few hours, to stretch his legs, simply writes his name. In the sixth ship, the Achilles, the Captain adheres to the strict letter of the Instructions, and requires all officers to first obtain his permission before absenting themselves from his ship. Why should these different modes of asking for leave of absence obtain in ships belonging to the same squadron? Were an inquiry made into the practice adopted on board each ship in the service, an endless variety of forms would be discovered to exist, much to the discomfort of the officers of the Navy. We, therefore, really think the time has come for the Admiralty to take this matter seriously in hand, with a view of simplifying the formality of asking leave. This could easily be done by issuing simple, but concise rules and regulations bearing on the subject. The "leave-board" system is the one which, we believe, finds the most favour in the service, and might with advantage be ordered to be generally adopted on board her Majesty's ships.

The Military Secretary will not hold a Levée until further notice.

It is definitely settled, we believe, that H.R.H. Field-Marshal the Prince of Wales will leave England for Homburg on the 14th inst.; and that he will, after the usual course at the Baths there, assist at the manœuvres of the German Army in the vicinity in September.

The Duke of Connaught will leave England for his Indian command on November 1, and will most probably establish his head-quarters at Meerut, on his arrival there. The presence of a Prince of the Blood Royal in command at that cantonment, where the great mutiny in 1857 began, will be regarded with much interest by the natives, and the assumption of military service there by the son of the Empress promises to mark a new and a very different era, we hope, in the history of British India.

The following telegram has been received by the Secretary of State for War from the General Officer Commanding in Egypt:—August 10. Reports very satisfactory. Cairo, no fresh case of cholera; 18 under treatment doing well. Helouan, no case for four days; nine cases in hospital recovering fast. Suez, no case since 6th; three under treatment doing well. Ismailia, no case since 4th; two in hospital recovering. El Wardan, no case since 3rd; ten cases under treatment recovering. Hope we are nearly "out of the wood."

The appointment of Commanding Royal Engineer in the West Indies is again vacant by death, Lieutenant-Colonel Richard Bullen, Royal Engineers, who went out from Ireland to take up the duty in the autumn of 1881, having succumbed to yellow fever. His predecessor, Colonel Donald Frazer, Royal Engineers, died from a similar cause, at Barbadoes, during the epidemic in August, 1881; and Lieutenant-Colonel Sidney Farrell, Royal Engineers, who preceded Colonel Frazer in the appointment, also fell a victim to the climate, dying at Barbadoes in September, 1879. A scarcity of volunteers for this desirable (?) post may well be imagined.

It has been decided to form a committee at Aldershot, composed as follows, for the purpose of revising the "Regulations for the Instruction and Movements of Cavalry," 1876:—President: Lieutenant-General Sir Frederick FitzWygram, Bart., Inspector-General of Cavalry for Great Britain. Members: Colonel W. Mussenden, Inspector of Auxiliary Cavalry; Colonel G. Luck, C.B., commanding 15th Hussars; Lieutenant-Colonel Philips, commanding 4th Hussars; Major P. H. S. Barrow, C.M.G., Brigade-Major, Cavalry. A similar committee, under the presidency of Major-General C. C. Fraser, V.C., C.B., Inspector-General of Cavalry in Ireland, has also been ordered to assemble. Great necessity exists for the appointment of a committee on this subject,—a most pressing one.

Major W. C. James, Royal Scots Greys, who has been for some time at Aldershot undergoing a course of instruction, in accordance with the regulations of the Staff College, has been permitted to remain at Aldershot, to perform the duties of Honorary Secretary to the War Game Committee, till the revised War Game rules are completed, and will be attached to the 3rd Brigade.

The 3rd Hussars and P Battery, 2nd Brigade, R.A., are still under canvas at Aldershot, at a considerable distance from the standing camps, the horses being picketed out, because of the recent outbreak of glanders. It has not been found necessary to destroy, during the week, any more horses of the Cavalry regiment. Several chargers, under observation at the lazaretto, have been returned to duty, and it is believed that the disease has been suppressed. This regiment and battery are still, however, excused attending divisional field-days and parades. It having been found that the rubbish-pit close to the Cambridge Hospital, though conveniently near to the lazaretto, is not altogether a suitable place for burying the bodies of diseased horses, a board of officers consisting of an officer of the Quartermaster-General's Department, the Inspecting Veterinary-Surgeon, Captain Reid, R.E., and the Sanitary Officer of the Division, assembled on Monday last at the Assistant-Quartermaster-General's office for the purpose of selecting a more suitable site for a burial-place for glandered horses.

The effect of the suspension of the Contagious Diseases Acts is becoming painfully apparent in many military hospitals. At Aldershot, the disease, which the working of these Acts had kept within moderate bounds, has increased 50 per cent. during the past three months. Nearly one-half of the men now in hospital at the Camp are suffering from venereal.

The School of Instruction for officers of Infantry Auxiliary Forces at Aldershot has, after a long period of inactivity, sprung into noisy but brief existence, and the Commandant of the School, with his Adjutant and the two serjeant-instructors, seem determined to work wonders with the fifteen officers under their instruction for a month. During two years, the entire work done by the Staff at this School has been to instruct two small classes of officers for thirty days each.

Preparations are still being made at Aldershot for the reception of visitors at the official residence of the Adjutant-General to the Forces, so long unoccupied; and it is believed at the Camp that Lord Wolseley will shortly take up his residence there for a time. It is said that the reason of the contemplated visit is a desire on the part of the Adjutant-General to see for himself the working of the new system of military training which is now being tried at the Camp. This system is certainly the cause of more grumbling and discontent among the non-commissioned officers and rank and file than any Army innovation of recent times.

Major-General Sarel, C.B., has, we believe, been offered the Governorship of Guernsey. Major-General Wray, C.B., R.E., is, we understand, an applicant for that of Jersey.

There are not wanting signs to prove that France and Russia are daily becoming more friendly. On the other hand, we are informed on very high authority that in Ministerial circles an alliance with Germany is looked upon as absolutely necessary, to check the encroaching Eastern policy of the Governments of both those countries; and it is said that Lord Granville is not only most favourably disposed to a close alliance with Germany for this purpose, but that he believes it will be found necessary within the next two years.

The reason why certain regiments placed their mess-plate in the hands of trustees, to which attention has been called in Parliament, was a rumour that the War Office contemplated the establishment of Brigade messes, and absorbing the regimental plate.

We wonder how much longer 11 Depôt Garrison Batteries of Artillery will be maintained for the chief purpose of clothing recruits. It seems extraordinary, when Infantry recruits are obliged to remain three months at their respective Brigade Depôts, that a similar system cannot be followed when a scientific soldier has to be turned out.

Mr. Tottenham will, on Monday, ask the Secretary of State for War if his attention has been called to letters in the Standard newspaper of the 4th and 7th inst., and if it is the case, as therein stated, that a Special Warrant is about to be issued to exempt Sir Andrew Clarke from the provisions of the existing regulations as to ineligibility for promotion on account of age. Whether the age as now fixed by Royal Warrant at which a Colonel of Engineers is ineligible for promotion is 59, and whether Sir Andrew Clarke has reached that age. Whether the local or temporary rank of Major-General was given to him to enable him to hold an office which it is laid down in the Queen's Regulations shall be held by a General Officer. And if he will state whether such proposed continued supersession of the claims of other distinguished officers to hold the appointment has met with any general expression of approval by them, and what special circumstances exist to justify an evasion of regulations heretofore rigidly enforced.

By a verbal error, we were made to say last week that the 43 Infantry Battalions at home, other than those on the increased strength, had not an establishment of 250 rank and file; this should have been 520, though in many cases the numbers do not at present exceed 250.

It is interesting to watch the efforts of the authorities to carry out the localisation scheme for the Royal Regiment of Artillery, and to obtain recruits for a rapidly diminishing corps. The 5th Brigade of the Scottish Division, Royal Artillery, in other words, the Forfar and Kincardine Artillery Militia, has lately been brought, at great expense, to Gosport (where no Battery of the Service Division is stationed) to undergo its training. The training has concluded, and the regiment has gone back to Scotland, without the authorities having been able to obtain a single volunteer, from a strength of 700 men.

We wonder the Antiquarian Society have remained so quiet, while the Government have taken the opportunity of building a General's residence into the ancient walls and celebrated gate of Dover Castle to abolish the salary and duties of an official specialist, who was accustomed to advise the Engineer officer in charge on these antiquarian matters. It will be interesting now to observe the style of the new house.

And so the statue of the Great Duke is to be redone in petto, and a general recasting of the Field-Marshal's effigies is to be prepared by Mr. Boehm. It is fortunate the iron, more terrible than the bronze Commendatore in Don Giovanni, is not likely to pay a visit to the artist's studio.

A correspondent has asked us for some information about the British Cavalry Regiments that fought in the campaigns in Holland in 1793-5 and 1799. The Royal Horse Guards, the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 5th, and 6th Dragoon Guards, the 1st, 2nd, and 6th Dragoons, and the 7th, 11th, 15th, and 16th Light Dragoons took part in the campaigns of 1793-5. The actions in which the British Cavalry bore a conspicuous part were:—Villers-en-Couche, April 24, 1794, where the two squadrons of the 15th that were engaged showed such extraordinary bravery that the Emperor presented to each of the officers a gold medal specially struck for the occasion, and the name of the action is now borne by the regiment on its appointments; the battle of Cateau, fought two days later, in which the Royal Horse Guards and several other cavalry regiments earned high honour; and the engagements near Tournay on the 10th and 22nd of May. The 7th, 11th, and 15th Light Dragoons did good service in the campaign of 1799. The last-named regiment bears "Egmont-op-Zee." The titles of the Light Dragoon Regiments we have mentioned have since been altered, at different times, to Hussars and Lancers; but all our old cavalry regiments (more fortunate than the infantry) have hitherto preserved their history and identity unbroken by visionary schemes of reorganisation. The 7th Dragoon Guards were known as "Ligonier's Black Horse" from 1720 to 1749.

M. Laissant, a French Deputy who exercised a great amount of influence in military matters, has got into sad trouble by bringing a general accusation of corruption against his colleagues. When called upon for names, he had to express his inability to furnish them. He excused his language on the ground that when M. Lockroy made a speech on the Railway Bill of a most patriotic character, and bearing on the defence of the country, the Chamber would not listen to him. It was then that, labouring under a feeling of profound indignation, M. Laissant accused the Lower House of being corrupt, and said very plainly that certain Deputies had received bribes not to disturb the present railway monopoly. The Radicals have some suspicion that in the event of another war the great lines will play the country false, and that France, owing to her present railway system, is in a defenceless condition. It is rather remarkable to find this opinion backed up to a certain extent by the Revue des Sciences Militaires, which says that France, in spite of all the money she has spent, is not in a position to prevent an invasion by Germany, that is to say, that she is only prepared to resist at three days' march behind the Moselle and the Meuse. If, however, the French are dissatisfied with their own strategical lines and means of defence, they are delighted to see the Germans complaining of the fortifications which Russia is constructing in Poland, and the railways which, "having no commercial advantages, are evidently intended to facilitate the rapid concentration of Muscovite armies on the Vistula in the event of a Russo-German war." Warsaw, too, is to be protected by seven new forts, forming a first line of defence at six miles from the city on the left bank of the river, and two miles to the rear of these, four more powerful forts. On the right bank, there are to be also four large forts.

Sir Charles Adair vacates his appointment on the 3rd prox.; Colonel Sir Francis Festing vacated his post on the 8th inst., on completion of his second period of Staff employment. On taking office shortly after the Ashantee War, where he rendered such excellent service, he found the corps in anything but a flourishing condition. Promotion was at a dead-lock, Mr. Ward Hunt having declined to meddle with Mr. Childers' handiwork. Little spurts were occasionally made, which only resulted in a temporary relief, and the loss of some of the best officers. Ever since Sir F. Festing has been in office he has been elaborating measures until at length he has the satisfaction of seeing the corps placed on a thoroughly sound footing as regards promotion and retirement. This result is in no small measure due, we believe, to the tact, judgment, and sound common-sense shown by him and his advisers. On three occasions the corps has been reorganised during these years, each organisation being a reduction in strength. We trust now that Colonel Walsh will find that these reductions are at an end. Parliament and the public have learned the value of the Marine corps. In rejoining his corps at Eastney, Colonel Festing carries with him, we believe, the goodwill and esteem of the service to which he belongs. Although he only rejoins as a regimental Lieutenant-Colonel, in a few weeks, on the promotion of Colonel Cox, he will succeed Colonel Bryges as second commandant.

The Journal de St. Petersburg notices a work on the sanitary condition of the Russian Army during the last war by Major Knorr. The author has availed himself of data published by General Todleben, Dr. Pirogow, MM. Abaza, Erismann, &c. He is astonished that the losses suffered by the Russian Army should have been so disproportioned to its great material resources. In the opinion of Major Knorr, this was all the fault of want of energy and attention of the Administrative. Let us take the figures collected by the German writer. The armies of the Caucasus and Danube have had out of 933,000 men, 117,621 deaths. In the German Army during the last war with France, there were 1,113,254 combatants, of which 40,743 lost their lives. It must be remarked that in the Russian Army disease carried off 81,166 men. In this way the number killed is reduced to 36,455 men. It follows that disease caused twice the loss to the Russian Army that was caused by the enemy. In the Prussian Army in 1870-71, the contrary was the case, disease only having carried off 12,115 men, whilst 28,628 men remained on the battle-field. The Russian hospitals admitted during the Eastern war 1,828,357 sick soldiers, being 195·6 per cent. of the army, showing that each soldier, on an average, passed twice at different times through them. They only had one doctor to 1,000 sick, or at most two. There occurred 11,000 cases of sickness proceeding from the cold. Of this number 1,530 died. Amongst the shortcomings of the last war should be noticed the insufficiency of food, and of means for disinfection of the lazarets. The comparison established between the Russian and German armies appears to us hardly fair, the theatre of war being quite different. France is noted for its salubrious climate, the banks of the Danube, and especially Asia Minor, being the hotbeds of contagion. The German writer, however, recognises that the activity of our Red Cross was worthy of all praise. He admires also the generosity and the self-denial of the Russian Society, whose donations reached the enormous sum of 22,000,000 roubles, which far surpasses the sums collected in Germany during the war of 1870-71,

The Navy.

The Cleopatra, Pegasus, Albatross, and Vigilant were at Chefoo on June 13, with the Flag. These ships, with the Curaçoa, Linnet, and Daring, would form the cruising squadron, which would leave Chefoo towards the end of June for a cruise in the Gulf of Pechili. The Daring was at Shanghai on June 8, and was to leave on June 16 for Chefoo. The Kestrel was at Hankow on May 23, and was to leave on June 1 for Shanghai, calling at the Treaty Ports in the Yangtse on the way down the river. The Flying Fish was at Chefoo on May 10, surveying on the West Coast of Borneo. The Magpie left Hong Kong on May 15 for Labuan, and would then proceed to Borneo, to commence surveying. Details have been received from Chefoo of the grounding of the Audacious. Owing to the shock, the officers' table was cleared of dishes, &c., and the lower deck was in a state of utter confusion. A marine named James Hickey, belonging to Bath, seeing a blaze from the fat which was capsized on the Admiral's galley fire, thought the ship was on fire, and rushed back to the mess-deck and jumped out of a porthole. Two other marines followed his example, and one of them, named Thomas Gaffney, of Newcastle, was swept away by the tide and drowned, with James Hickey. The other, named Samuel Cooper, managed to return on board. Next morning the Audacious, while at anchor, touched again, but the port anchor was let go, and she was brought into deep water.

OSBORNE (Royal yacht), Com. Rose. As the Royal yacht, with T.R.H. the Prince and Princess of Wales and the Royal Princesses, H.R.H. the Grand Duchess of Saxe-Meinengen, &c., on board, attended by a party of distinguished visitors to Cowes, who had received the honour of an invitation to accompany their Royal Highnesses, was running along the coast of the Isle of Wight, on her way towards the Needles, on Thursday last, in a stiff gale of wind, one of the sailing boats engaged in a match was seen to capsize and disappear, leaving her crew of four sailors to struggle with a heavy sea. The yacht, which was going at full speed, reversed engines, and the lifeboat, in charge of Lieut. Graham, was manned and lowered with great smartness, and propelled by vigorous arms towards the drowning men, who were more than a quarter of a mile away; and at the same time a steam launch from the shore came to their aid. It was with intense interest the progress of the boats was observed from the yacht and the shore, for it was very doubtful whether the men could live in such a sea; but they were fortunately all stout swimmers, and the spectators had the satisfaction of seeing the launch pick up three of them, the fourth being saved, not a moment too soon, by the Osborne's lifeboat, and taken on board, where he was attended by Dr. Woods. The other men were carried on shore by the steam launch.

PIONEER, Lieut. and Com. H. M. C. Festing, will be paid out of commission at Sheerness on Aug. 14, after seven years' service on the Cape of Good Hope and West Coast of Africa Station. Her guns have been removed to Chatham Gun Wharf, where they will remain until the Pioneer is again brought forward for active service.

REPULSE, Capt. G. L. Sulivan, is ordered to undergo a thorough refit before proceeding to Hull, to resume her duties as Coastguard ship of the Humber district. The Repulse will remain at Sheerness for three weeks, the necessary repairs to her hull and machinery being executed by mechanics from Sheerness Dockyard. Efforts are being made to induce the Admiralty to shift the moorings of the Repulse, at Hull, to a more convenient situation, but it is not expected that the work will be taken in hand during the present summer. The Repulse will take in stores at Sheerness for the winter months.

SATELLITE, Capt. Theobald, arrived at Monte Video on August 9, and would leave on August 15 for the Pacific.

SHELDRAKE, Lieut. and Com. Bridger, arrived at Aden on August 9.

STORK, Lieut. and Com. Blennerhasset, while on her way to St. Paul de Loanda, called at Mayumba River, and a sporting trip, in which the officers were to participate, was arranged by Mr. Preuslau, a factory agent, who, with Lieut. and Com. Blennerhasset, Lieut. Henry Leeke, and Mr. Anderson, surgeon, were together in a boat on the river, when they were attacked by a hippopotamus. The animal had been wounded, and made a furious assault on the boat, which, notwithstanding the strenuous efforts of its occupants, was capsized. Lieut. Blennerhasset was saved, but Lieut. Leeke, Dr. Anderson, and Mr. Preuslau, sad to relate were drowned. Lieut. Leeke served with credit on board the Achilles during the Egyptian War.

SULTAN, Capt. Walter Hunt-Grubbe, K.C.B., arrived at Spithead on Aug. 5, and went into harbour on Aug. 6, to give ten days' leave to each watch.

Queenstown, Thursday, August 9.

Yesterday week, the 1st, was the final day of the torpedo operations, when rapid creeping with steam pinnaces and rafts was practised; in the afternoon, we manned and armed boats, and afterwards hoisted them in. On Thursday the Agincourt went out early for target practice; the rest of the squadron unmoored in the afternoon, and got under weigh at 4 o'clock. We stood out in single column line ahead, and passed between two buoys which had been laid down by the Hecla, marking a channel in which they had placed a line of electro-contact mines. The ships took station a little on the port quarter of their leaders, so as to extend across the channel, the Minotaur passing close to the right-hand buoy, and the rear ship, the Northumberland, to the left. As we passed, we heard numerous explosions at the firing station on shore, showing that the mines were effective. They nearly all went off, and the squadron was, theoretically, annihilated. Soon after this we ran into a fog bank, which was hanging about the bay, and anchored for the night. It cleared off in the evening, and the Sultan left us for Portsmouth, where she has gone to give a fortnight's leave to each watch. We arrived in Queenstown Harbour on Aug. 3, passing the Valiant as we entered. We entered the Heads at 6 p.m., the Minotaur leading, closely followed by the Neptune and Agincourt, the Northumberland and Achilles bringing up the rear. The flag of Rear-Admiral Lethbridge having been duly saluted, the squadron moored. On Sunday the ships were visited by thousands of people, large crowds arriving every hour alongside in passenger steamers. The Mayor of Cork, accompanied by the Committee of the Cork Exhibition, called upon Vice-Admiral Sir William Dowell, K.C.B., on Monday, and afterwards visited the other ships, and invited the captains and officers to visit the Exhibition. The party then returned on board the Minotaur, where they were most courteously received by Sir William Dowell, Capt. Fellowes, Lieut. Duncombe, and other officers, and conducted to the Admiral's cabin. Subsequently they were shown round the ship, and the various appliances, including the torpedo machines, fully explained. Having spent some time in this very pleasant manner, the party were invited to partake of a sumptuous repast, at which Sir W. Dowell presided. The guests took leave about 3 o'clock, much gratified with the very kind and cordial reception accorded to them. It has been arranged by the Executive Committee of the Cork Exhibition to entertain the Admiral and officers of the Squadron at the Exhibition Buildings on Thursday next, when it is hoped that a large number will be present, and when an opportunity will also be taken of showing the officers the Cork Exhibition. It is expected that the Fleet will leave Cork Harbour on August 14, when their destination will be Portsmouth and Plymouth. On Wednesday night the harbour was lighted up by the electric lights of the Squadron, when a very grand sight was witnessed from the shore. The band of the Minotaur performed on the promenade quay.

Vice-Admiral Dowell and the officers of the Fleet were entertained to luncheon at Cork on Wednesday at the Exhibition buildings by the members of the Executive Committee of the Exhibition. The officers were afterwards conducted through the Exhibition. It is intended to give another banquet to them this day.

The Admiralty have issued a fleet circular making numerous changes in the Queen's Regulations, with a view to rendering the precautions against fire more efficient.

The Leander left Sheerness on Tuesday for a series of trials of her machinery on the measured mile, Maplin Sands. The Leander being the first of three fast ocean cruisers of a new class, considerable importance is attached to the trials. She was built by Messrs. John Napier and Sons, of Glasgow, who are also constructing two vessels of a similar type for the Government.

The under-named men have been awarded the medal for long service and good conduct:—George Cozens, quartermaster, of the Excellent; Daniel T. Bunting, ship's corporal, 1st class, of the Excellent; William Henry Webber, boatswain's mate, of the Vernon; H. Minhinnick, torpedo artificer, of the Vernon; William Butler, ship's corporal, 2nd class, of the St. Vincent; William Vincent, shipwright, of the Indus; John T. Green, commissioned boatman, of the Coastguard; Albert Parker, gunner, R.M.A., of the Defence; John Squires, serjeant, R.M.A., of the Lord Warden; William Grimster (boatman), William E. Jones (commissioned boatman), Thomas Cowen (boatman), of the Coastguard; John Milsom, leading seaman, of the Agincourt; Frederick Grubb, painter, 2nd class, of the Sultan; Frederick Cole, leading seaman, of the Neptune; George Broad, leading stoker, of the Kingfisher; James Hirst, serjeant, R.M.L.I., of the Temeraire; Emanuel Beregose, bandmaster, and John Whiller, gunner's mate of the Temeraire; Samuel Croft, armourer, of the Urgent; Charles Rowe, captain's coxswain, of the Daring; John Harris, commissioned boatman, of the Coastguard.

NAVAL WARRANT OFFICERS.

In the interests alike of the Petty Officers and Seamen of the Navy, no less than that of the Warrant Officers, we are pleased to learn that a Committee has been appointed by the Admiralty to report upon the desirability of improving the position of the latter class, and to offer suggestions as to the direction such improvement, if recommended, should take. We have long advocated the case of the Warrant officers, feeling that any measures taken to remove their reasonable complaints, and the disabilities under which they labour, which are so temperately stated in their recently published "appeal," cannot but re-act for good on the rank and file, so to speak, of the Naval service. In dealing with the Warrant officers, the Admiralty should ever bear in mind the fact that Article 252, page 60, of the Queen's Regulations, notwithstanding—it being to all intents and purposes a "dead letter"—the "Warrant" and the rank of "Chief" springing from the Warrant, is the highest position in the service open to our seamen and petty officers. For this reason, if for no other, both the "Warrant" and the "chief" ranks should be made positions worth striving for. When, too, we consider that the discipline so necessary to maintain in the Navy makes the road to promotion none of the smoothest, and that only the best men are likely to reach the goal, this also should not be forgotten in dealing with the Warrant officers. Amongst the points well worthy of consideration by the Committee, is the one of age retirement. At the age of 50, a Warrant officer will have served about 35 years as officer, man, and boy. It would thus appear that if all Warrant officers and Chiefs were compulsorily retired at the age of 50, the service would benefit, while the individual would not suffer. But should retirement at 50 be made compulsory, as we think it should be, the scale of retiring pay for each year's service, both as Warrant officer and as Chief, should certainly be raised. After a service of 35 years, a maximum scale of £150 per annum for a Warrant officer, and of £200 per annum for a chief gunner, boatswain, and carpenter could scarcely be deemed excessive. Again, the existing scale of progressive pay is a point that certainly claims the attention of the Committee. It is hardly consistent to stop all increment of pay on an officer attaining 15 years' seniority. Other ranks in the Navy are treated with more consideration than this. If a Warrant officer, on attaining 15 years' seniority, was immediately promoted to chief rank, the case perhaps might wear a different complexion. Another point for consideration by the Committee is not merely the desirability, but the necessity, for limiting the appointments of boatswains of dockyards, of master riggers, and, in fact, of all such appointments, to the period of five years. The prolongation of these appointments for almost interminable periods, as at present, is productive of much injustice and of most reasonable complaints, keeping many an equally deserving officer alike out of promotion and out of his legitimate turn of home service. The subject of uniform is also one that we hope will not be overlooked by the Committee. Then there is the question of compassionate allowance for the orphans of Warrant officers and of Chiefs. The time has long since arrived when provision in this direction should be made for the orphans of officers promoted from the ranks, as for the orphans of other officers whose entry into the service is not through the lower deck. No one knows better than the present Permanent Secretary of the Admiralty the value of the Warrant officers to the Navy, and with the broad and liberal views of so able an officer brought to bear on their case, not merely as a class, but as affecting all the seamen ratings, we await with confidence the result of the Committee's deliberations.

THE BRITANNIA.

Sir,—Some two or three months since, I wrote and gave it as my opinion, and I may add that of many others, in respect to the Britannia and Hindostan, that they are old and useless, as well as expensive pieces of stupidity, but in reading your Editorial foot note observed the words:—"We do not see our way clear at present to recommend the Admiralty to abolish the ship, as she serves a most useful purpose,"—may I ask in all honesty in what manner? 1. A sum of £9,181 expended to fit her for a school ship for the Naval cadets. 2. £280 per annum for their education, which should be paid by the parents, and not by the country. Better spend the money in the shape of pensions for those who have faithfully and honestly served their Queen and Country, or on their widows and orphans. No; a rich and generous country would sooner let them rot in a gaol, or die and be buried as paupers. In the issue of July 21, a very excellent note appears on the Navy, and in one part of it Mr. Gorst, M.P. for Chatham, asks why the Naval cadets could not be sent to sea at 16 (I say 17), and subsequently serve two years at the Royal Naval College. It is to be hoped that Mr. Gorst, or some other Member, will continue to moot the question and abolish the ships, replace them by one or two training-ships, form a general mess as in the Army, and then Naval Cadets could be made good and efficient officers,—vide the Right Hon. the Earl of Dalhousie, who some time since made a very able and true statement in the House of Lords on the subject; and as that officer was for some two years commander of the ship, who has a better right to form an opinion? Were it studied by the Admiralty, it would do all good. Allow me to make a few suggestions, viz.:—1. The Naval Cadet should be taught the use of steam, as in these days it is in such use; also mooring and unmooring, small-arms, remarks, and how to make sketches as they run along the coasts, home and foreign; also soundings, but steam in particular. French and German also very useful, but less required than steam. The Naval College should be at Portsmouth, as in the good old times; the hospital to be again given to the old, infirm, and blind, and those who have fought and bled for Old England. I could say more, but now conclude.—I am, &c., Common-Sense.

Reviews.

Across Chrysê. By A. Colquhoun. (Sampson Low Marston, and Co.)

The accomplishment of a journey of exploration through the South China border-lands from Canton to Mandalay represents an event of extraordinary interest. A large portion of the territories travelled over by the author were never before explored by Europeans, and the line he followed was practically a new one. No person can fail to appreciate the importance of direct land communications between India and China, and few will be found to deny that Mr. Colquhoun's work, which would be valuable at any time, becomes much more so in consequence of the crisis that has recently arisen in the affairs of the Indo-Chinese peninsula. The author's style is impressive, and is remarkable for its perspicuity and the entire absence of what is commonly called "word-painting." As to the practical good that may be derived from a work like this, it is sufficient to say that one of the great objects of the author's perilous journey was that of effecting, or rather of preparing the grounds of effecting, an extension of English trade intercourse in the vast region watered by the upper courses of the Mekong and Songcoi, and inhabited for the most part by Shan and other tribes. A further object may be that of impressing upon adventurous spirits by the aid of maps the possibility of constructing a railway from British Burmah through the Shan country to Puerh and Sunmad, the southern limits of his tour in Yunnan, and then proving the practicability of his theory by returning forthwith for the purpose of traversing this projected route. The question is one of extreme importance to the Government of India, and it is pleasing to find that this is fully recognised, as appears from a meeting which took place on June 8, at the Chamber of Commerce, Rangoon. The question under discussion then was Mr. Colquhoun's proposal to conduct another exploring expedition into the Shan States. It was universally acknowledged that the information he had already obtained about the products of countries in the neighbourhood of Burmah, hitherto but little known, is of the first importance to British trade. It was also acknowledged that it is highly desirable that further exploration should be made, and further information obtained about the more promising outlets for British commerce in the direction of the Shan States. At the conclusion of this meeting, the thanks of the Chamber were conveyed to Mr. Colquhoun, who was at the same time informed that the merchants of Rangoon intended to write to the head offices of their respective firms in Europe, urging the importance of further exploration. Across Chrysê has created in the literary world such a great interest, that the forthcoming work will, no doubt, be anxiously waited for.

The Life and Achievements of Edward Henry Palmer. By Walter Besant, M.A. (John Murray.)

It is not probable that there is any one so well qualified as Mr. Besant to sketch the life and record the death of Edward Palmer. They were chosen companions for many years, dating from 1868-69, when Palmer first went out to the desert and peninsula of Sinai as a member of Captain Wilson's surveying expedition. They then worked together on various subjects, chiefly connected with the Holy Land. Mr. Besant's estimate of his friend was a high one, but none who knew him could say that it was too high. He regarded Palmer as a scholar and student, most earnest and resolute, yet always with the heart of a boy; so great a linguist that he stood alone, yet always modest; full of reliance in himself and his own powers, yet never vainglorious; always at work, yet always with time for leisure; the most serious man in the world when he had a purpose in view, yet the most delightful and the most mirthful of companions. It may be called the irony of fate which decreed that a man so gifted was to become the friend of gipsies, a conjurer and magician, an intrepid explorer of unvisited districts, a writer of leading articles, a translator of the New Testament, a mesmerist among his friends, a reconteur of the first order, and finally it was decreed for him that he should end his days after an exploit unparallelled, and in a manner strange, wonderful, and tragic, and that he should find a resting-place with England's heroes. It can scarcely be supposed that Mr. Besant would approach the task of writing such a life as that without some apprehension that he should find the task too difficult to accomplish. If he did feel so, he must be perfectly reassured by the verdict already pronounced in favour of a work which has served in great part to clear up the mystery which shrouded the fate of Edward Palmer and his companions. Even now we can only surmise the full horror of the last scene, when Palmer repeatedly offered to give all the money if their lives were saved, and he and his friends were driven down to the spot fixed upon for execution. The end is thus described:—"On arrival at the wady, they were ordered to climb down some steep cliff, in order to arrive at the plateau overlooking the gully into which they were to be cast. This being accomplished, they were placed in a row facing the gully, with five Bedouins, one behind each, told off to shoot them at a given signal. They were then driven towards the end of the gully, but before the signal was given, one of them fired at Professor Palmer and killed him." Very soon after the murder, it was reported in Cairo that the Sheikh Abdullah, before being killed, solemnly cursed his murderers. To explain this, it must be understood that cursing, in the hands of an Oriental who knows how to curse, is a most powerful weapon of defence. Palmer knew every form of Arab cursing; he was driven to this as his last resource. Again, to understand an Oriental curse, one must go to the Old Testament. Such a curse is a solemn and an awful thing, and Mr. Besant has no doubt whatever that the denunciations of woe, ruin, desolation, and death—Palmer's last words—which fell upon the ears of those wild desert men, and were echoed back from the rocks around them, became to them a prophecy, sure and certain as the vengeance of the Lord. This book will be read with melancholy interest. It tells a tale of daring on one side and of miserable mismanagement on the other, which will not cease to be remembered for many a long day.

Jahresberichte über die Veränderungen und Fortschritte im Militärwesen. Ninth Year (1882). By Col. H. von Löbell. (Berlin: E. S. Mittler und Sohn.)

The ninth annual issue of these Yearly Reports on the Changes and Progress in Military Matters appears in its usual form, and is treated in the same manner as its predecessors. A highly interesting and exhaustive report on the development of the German Navy from 1873 to 1883 precedes the first part proper of the work. It was thought that the first decennium of the work of reorganisation, or, rather, creation of that Navy, as laid down in the Flottengründungsplan of 1873, formed a fitting period for such a review. It is only by reading this thoroughly trustworthy report that a just idea can be formed of the energy displayed by those at the head of the German Admiralty who had a share in the truly national work. In the first part of the volume before us, we find incorporated a report on the Army of Austria, comprising the years 1881 and 1882. It will be remembered that for various reasons it was impossible to give in the eighth issue of the work an account of the changes that had taken place during 1881 in the Austrian Army. This omission is now rectified. For the first time since the publication of the Jahresberichte, a report on the Army of the Republic of Mexico finds a place there. The former accounts of the military forces of Portugal and the Swiss Confederation have been supplemented by additional data; whilst the reports on the armies of Belgium, Bulgaria, Denmark, Egypt, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Italy, Montenegro, the Netherlands, Norway, Eastern Roumelia, Roumania, Russia, Servia, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, and the United States, have been based more or less on those of preceding years. The second part of the volume contains essays on infantry, cavalry, and artillery tactics, sieges, as well as reports on fortifications, artillery material, and military literature of the years 1881 and 1882. The third part, finally, of the book deals with the wars and expeditions during 1882 in Tunis, Algiers, Bocca di Cattaro and the Herzegovina, and Egypt. With regard to our operations on the Nile, it may be observed that the author gives us a "plain, unvarnished tale;" but even in its unadorned garb, his account bears ample testimony to the efficient manner in which the campaign was begun, and the brilliant way in which it was finished. We may add that the volume of Colonel Löbell concludes, as usual, with an obituary of distinguished officers who died during 1882, and a military chronicle of the year. The author has spared no pains to keep the work up to its former high standard, and it is chiefly on this account that we again commend it to the serious attention of British officers.

Elementary Treatise on Physics. By E. Atkinson, Ph.D., F.C.S. (Longman and Co.)—This very valuable work has now reached the eleventh edition. The fresh matter has increased the size of the book, as it stood in the last edition, by about 32 pages, and the new matter includes 30 additional illustrations, while the chapter on the steam engine has been entirely recast. The increasing favour with which this work is regarded cannot be much wondered at. As a text-book for colleges and schools, and also as a work of reference for the general reader, it is recognised as one of great value in an educational point of view. The author wishes it to be regarded as a general elementary treatise on physics, and that while it accordingly aims at giving an account of the most important facts and general laws of all branches of physics, any attempt to treat completely and exhaustively of any one branch would both be inconsistent with the general plan of the book and impossible within the available space.

Mr. Gundry, chief gunner of the Duke of Wellington, has been superannuated after 38 years' service. He has been chief gunner of the Duke of Wellington during the past four years, and his messmates have presented him with an oil painting of himself, and have entertained him at dinner on board the ship.

The experimental practice which has just taken place at Aldershot with a division of the Mule Mountain Battery of 7-pounder screw guns, was under the supervision of Capt. J. W. Hawkins, R.A.; not of Major G. W. Hawkins, R.A., as stated in our issue of last week.

Letts's Popular Atlas is just now complete. The Saturday Review, May 12, 1883, says:—"We can honestly add that the unmounted edition (£2 2s) of Messrs. Letts's Atlas is beyond all question the cheapest full compendium of geographical information to be obtained, and the mounted form (£5) one of the most handsome."—Detailed Prospectus of Letts, Limited, London Bridge, E.C.

LEAVE TO GO ASHORE.

SIR,—There is one grievance which causes endless annoyance and bad feeling, which is totally opposed to the spirit of the age, and which has been abolished by many of our most able captains, though foolishly enforced by others as being the "custom of the service," the habit of requiring ward-room officers to ask leave to go on shore. In the Channel Fleet the Ward-room officers of the Minotaur and Neptune ask no leave whatever; on board the Agincourt, Northumberland, and Sultan, there are leave-boards; and in one ship alone, viz., the Achilles, is it necessary for ward-room officers to ask leave when they wish to go ashore. So out of six ships, the so-called "custom of the service" is only enforced in one. Surely a leave-board answers all purposes, and enables any one at a glance to see who is on board and who is not, and avoids any such unpleasantness as that which occurred the other day on board one of her Majesty's ships, where the captain ordered "heads of departments" first of all to obtain his permission to go ashore, and then to report their departure from and return to the ship to the commander, which produced such friction that he found it advisable to cancel his order five days after he had issued it. Surely it would be a good thing, and one which would add greatly to the comfort and dignity of Naval officers, if the leave-board system was required by the Admiralty to be adopted throughout the service.—I am, &c.,

A WARD-ROOM OFFICER.

SPECTACLES v. BLINDNESS.—"One fourth of those suffering from dimness of sight or blindness can trace their calamity to the use of Spectacles indiscriminately purchased and unsuited to the sight. Mr. H. LAURANCE, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, 39 Old Bond Street, having made the adaptation of spectacles his especial and sole study for upwards of thirty years, personally adapts his improved lenses. Testimonials as to the success of Mr. Laurance's treatment have been received from Earl Lindsay, Sir George Henry Scott Douglas, Bart., Sir Graham Briggs, Bart., Sir Julius Benedict, F. D. Dixon Hartland, Esq., M.P., Lieutenant-General Macmullen, Brentwood, General Torrens, commanding Cork Division, Thomas Cook, Esq., the well-known Tourist Agent, &c. Pamphlet, "Spectacles: their Use and Abuse," post free. City Branches, 6 Poultry, Cheapside, and 22 Fenchurch Street, E.C.

Amusements.

DRURY LANE has reopened for the autumnal season with one of those costly and elaborate spectacles the present lessee has judged by experience most likely to gain the patronage of the multitude. In the four-act drama of "Freedom," framed by Messrs. George F. Rowe and Augustus Harris, dramatic consistency is rendered entirely subordinate to scenic effect. This being understood, any claims to literary consideration may be contentedly left out of the question, and the success obtained may be justly ascribed to the splendour of the accessories, and the extreme care shown in the arrangement of a series of highly-coloured Oriental pictures. The action takes place entirely in Egypt, at a period, we are allowed to infer, not very remote from the latest bombardment of Alexandria. The chief object of the incidents, somewhat loosely strung together, is, however, not to show so much the consequences of British intervention as the horrors of a long-continued system of Egyptian slavery. A succession of picturesque views by Mr. H. Emden, with two highly effective scenes painted by Mr. William Beverley, exhibited in the last act, and representing ruins of colossal temples on the banks of the Nile, suffice to constitute a really powerful attraction. Real camels and mules are introduced, to give local colouring to adroitly arranged pictures of Oriental life, and there is everywhere evidence of prodigal expenditure on the part of the manager. The result is a showy but artistically-devised production. Mr. Augustus Harris represents with great spirit and energy the young commander of "Her Majesty's Despatch Boat Arrow," and performs marvellous feats of valour, besides saving, at the peril of his own life, the honour of his intended bride. Mr. G. F. Rowe, described as "a man from Texas," embodies the conventional stage American, with revolvers in every pocket, and reserves of dynamite in the toes of his boots. Small comic parts of a not very congenial kind are assigned to Mr. Harry Jackson and Mr. H. Nicholls, and Mr. James Fernandez pourtrays with notable skill the treacherous and amorous Mohammed Araf Bey. Miss Bromley as the heroine Constance Loring, Miss Sophie Eyre as the jealous wife of the intriguing governor of an unnamed Egyptian city, and Miss Lydia Foote as an ill-used captive from Crete, render valuable aid in the few dramatic situations. The several conflicts between the British troops and the insurgent Arabs are exhibited with realistic effect, and the vast capacity of the stage is revealed in the latest Drury-Lane novelty by a series of rapid and elaborate scenic changes of a novel and notable kind.

The COVENT GARDEN Promenade Concert season has commenced under very favourable auspices. On the opening night, when nearly six thousand persons paid for admission, a very attractive programme was provided. Madame Rose Hersee and Madame Enriquez were enthusiastically encored in their songs. Mr. Maybrick sang with excellent effect, and the remarkably fine voice of Mr. Joseph Maas was heard to the best advantage in his exquisite rendering of "Annabel Lee," "The Anchor's Weighed," and "Come into the Garden, Maud." On Wednesday evening was given the first classical concert, which testified to the ability of the conductor, Mr. A. Gwyllym Crowe, and the excellence of the numerous orchestra under his direction. There was a very large attendance.

The GRAND THEATRE, at Islington, has realised the expectations of the residents in that suburb. An audience of three thousand persons can here be most commodiously provided for, and no existing establishment in the metropolis is better provided with facilities for ready entrance and exit. A realistic domestic drama in four acts, called "The Bright Future," has successfully commenced what promises to be a prosperous season.

On Bank Holiday, at the ADELPHI, the VAUDEVILLE, and TOOLE'S THEATRE, morning performances of "The Streets of London," the farcical comedy of "Confusion," and the late T. W. Robertson's comedy of "M.P." were given.

In order to make some required alterations in the working departments of the theatre, the HAYMARKET will close for the season at the end of the present week. The performance of "Fédora" will, however, be resumed in September.

CRIMEAN MEMORIAL CHURCH, CONSTANTINOPLE.

Most Englishmen are probably aware that after the close of the Russian War in 1856, a Church was built at Constantinople by public subscription, in memory both of the great struggle in which our nation had been engaged, and of the many Christians, our countrymen, who had lost their lives in its cause. At a public meeting held in London, April 28, 1856, H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge in the chair, it was resolved "That the most suitable memorial would be an edifice in which Almighty God might, from generation to generation, be worshipped according to the rites and usages of the Church of England, and that such a Memorial Church be erected at Constantinople." The Church was built, and vested in the SOCIETY for the PROPAGATION of the GOSPEL in FOREIGN PARTS, who in 1856 sent to Constantinople the Rev. C. G. Curtis, M.A., who has acted as Chaplain up to the present time. The cost of erecting a handsome church in a place so peculiarly situated as Constantinople was necessarily great, and no endowment could be provided even for needful repairs.

An APPEAL is therefore now made to the English nation, and especially to those two great services, the Army and the Navy, to assist in providing a capital sum of not less than £5,000, to be vested in the Incorporated Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, the interest to be applied to the maintenance in suitable repair of the fabric of this great National Memorial. This appeal has received the cordial support of H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief and the Right Rev. the Chaplain-General.

Donations and Subscriptions will be received by the TREASURERS of the SOCIETY for the PROPAGATION of the GOSPEL in FOREIGN PARTS, 19 Delahay Street, S.W. Cheques should be crossed "Drummond's."

August, 1883. H. W. TUCKER, Secretary.

FEW men are better able to institute a critical comparison between the German and British Armies than Captain Hozier, who has written an excellent article on the subject in the Nineteenth Century for the current month. He opens his remarks by a retrospect of the Armies from the day they met as allies on the field of Waterloo, and shows how, at the end of the long peace which ensued, the British Army was the first of the two to be called into actual service in a European campaign. He reminds us that although it sustained its reputation in India and in Persia, its experience in the Crimea was disastrous; "in everything but the courage of its officers and men, which still proved as undaunted as ever, the British Army signally failed, the organisation was found puerilely defective, its administration senilely feeble;" although barely six miles from the storeships laden with heavy cargoes, "the land transport over these six miles was more than could be provided for, and the soldiers died like rotten sheep from starvation and sickness, almost within sight of the food that would have kept them alive, and the medicines that would have healed them." He contrasts this with the state of the Prussian troops when their army entered Austria in 1866, and in a very short period drove the Austrians to take shelter behind the Danube; and when, four years later, the same army "poured over the Saar and the Rhine into Alsace, Lorraine, and Champagne, swept away the French Imperial Guard, cast a band of iron around Metz, and drew a tight blockade around Paris." Although Prussia had been ground down and almost effaced from among the nations, after she was overrun by the First Napoleon, England had not been impoverished by an invader, and she had not laboured under stipulations to limit her army. Prussia conquered and England failed in their first campaigns. The writer asks,—"Why was it that the British Army failed so dismally in the Crimean Campaign, while the Prussians succeeded so splendidly in the Seven Weeks' War? Why was it that the British troops were butchered wholesale by a barbarous force in South Africa, when the German troops, without a check, carried the tide of war through France? Why is it that at the present time all is confused, doubtful, and vacillating in the British service, where nothing appears to be constant, except change itself, while in the German Army military advancement and military progress are regulated with the skill of the mathematician and the precision of the astronomer?" Every branch of the British service has been made the subject of exhaustive inquiry and report, and yet we appear to be as far from final regulations as ever. On the other hand, the constitution of the German Army may be considered the finest military machine in existence. After Jena, Napoleon limited the Prussian Army to 42,000 men; but this was most evaded by the introduction of a short service system which quickly created an army of 250,000 drilled men, of whom 170,000 were ready to take the field. Every Prussian capable of bearing arms was liable to military service from his twentieth to twenty-third year in the Standing Army, from twenty-three to twenty-five in the Reserve, from twenty-five to thirty in the 1st Levy of the Landwehr, and thirty-two to thirty-nine in the 2nd Levy; and when the Landsturm was called out, every man between seventeen and forty-nine who did not belong to the Standing Army or the Landwehr was liable. By this system, slightly modified in 1859, Prussia could raise for war 530,000 men,—hardly one-fourth of whom would be with the colours in time of peace. Constant improvements were made, until the army was brought to such a pitch of excellence as to achieve the glories of the Seven Weeks' War. In the German Army, the system of food supply is excellent, and though the men to be supplied in France numbered as many times more than the British force in the Crimea, yet no hitch occurred. In Germany, the supply of troops in the field is not left to the General in command, but is arranged by the Intendantur, who mobilises the transport which follows the army into the field. "When all is so smooth, elastic, and easily worked, and so economical, in the German system, why do not we in England adopt that system in its entirety?" Captain Hozier replies by showing that we have to provide for what Germany has not, viz., India and the Colonies, garrisons in the Mediterranean, guards for foreign coaling stations, and dockyards, and other services. Although there are many points of German Military administration it might be desirable to adopt, the conditions are so different that the Military system of Germany could not be followed by England. Captain Hozier says that a great portion of the difficulty in obtaining recruits arises "from too close an attempt having been made to imitate the German system of recruiting." "Common-sense dictates what experience has proved,—that it must be impossible to obtain by voluntary enlistment men who for five or six years will consent to give up civil employment to serve for that time in the Army, and thenereturn to civil life, without pension, without provision, having lost all knowledge of trade and means of livelihood." The stumbling-block we encounter in the Short-service system is manifest, and as conscription will not be accepted in this country, the difficulty should be met by greater liberality, and by pension to those who elect to remain with the colours. Captain Hozier recommends enlistment at the age of seventeen for three years, but not for foreign service; those who are well fitted for military life at twenty to be re-enlisted for a further period of nine years for general service, and a second selection made for another nine years to complete for pension. This would, no doubt, be more attractive to young men than the present system. "London and Woolwich should be girdled with forts, so as to make them secure against a coup de main;" the Reserves should be a reality; the Volunteers available for home or garrison defence, and "one corps always held on a war footing at Aldershot ready to take the field at a few days' notice." This means money; but considering the enormous wealth of the country to be defended, and the "terrible calamity that would befall us in the event of a successful invasion by an enemy, the £17,000,000 for the Army and £10,000,000 for the Navy are ludicrously small premiums for the security of our national wealth." The picture drawn by the writer of the results of an invasion by a force landing successfully on the Sussex or Essex coast, taking possession of our capital, and exacting ransom, is too terrible. He concludes by saying that "we alone of European nations appear blind to the fact that railways and telegraphs have entirely revolutionised the progress of military events. Wars tend to be more and more sudden in their outbreak, more and more rapid in their incidents, and those who are not forearmed become every day more liable to be ignominously surprised and abjectly laid low." Some fine, or foul, day, all of the most important suggestions which have been made for the real improvement of the Army—not tom-fool devices of sounding names and empty territorial caprices—will be forced on the consideration of our rulers, and it will be well if we have only to pay more money, as the price of our safety and our honour. But just now it is whistling jigs to milestones to cry aloud and try to awaken the nation, which is quite satisfied that the Army that beat Arabi can go anywhere and do anything! Alas! Captain Hozier's book will enable any reader to see how we have grasped at the shadow of a great Military organisation, and have lost "the substance of ten thousand soldiers." It is a matter of small importance, but it is noteworthy that the author is not quite correct in his account of the composition and distribution of the Army Corps; but that is the only inaccuracy in his excellent work.

THE fourteen Provincial Assemblies and the National Chamber of Deputies devised by Lord Dufferin as a first step to self-government in Egypt, will be called into existence under unfavourable circumstances. There are the cattle plague, a bad harvest, a dangerous Nile (now falling), middling sugar prospects, inferior cotton, and cholera, to mark the time. But whatever be the result, the most impudent trader on our ignorance of Egyptian matters would scarcely venture, we think, to assert that the experiment is in any way whatever dependent upon the presence of the British Army in the country. The elections, for the most part, will be in districts where one of our soldiers has never been seen. Our troops are out on the desert beyond Alexandria and Cairo. They are at Port Said, at Ismailia, at Suez. There is not one of them in any way concerned in the elections, be they farce, or melodrama, or solemn tragedy. The machinery, such as it is, from beginning to end, is Egyptian, and worked by Egyptians. Even the original idea was Egyptian, not European. But we shall be told by disconsolate British lawyers of Alexandria—who know as much about the country they have lived in all their lives as a Thames bargee does of the Highlands—that, if our troops are withdrawn, Lord Dufferin's scheme must fail, the real cause of his anxiety to keep them being the support their presence gives to the claims of supremacy, not of England, but of every Englishman in Egypt, over every native of the country. Hence it is we hear these prophecies of woe; the outrageous fictions as to the past and the present; the heated and foolish, as well as offensive, diatribes against the "natives;" the accusations against the people en bloc, from the Khedive to the donkey-boy, which are sent over and under the sea, by post and by wire, to the London newspapers. The British public are entreated to believe that the whole apparatus of Government, from Wady Halfa to the Mahmoudieh Canal, is handled by Sir E. Malet, General Stephenson, General Earle, General Dormer, and General Arbuthnot, without anything but opposition from the Egyptians, who are universally incapable, cowardly, corrupt, and idiotic. Incapable, although Egypt was governed with as much advantage to the people from the time of Said till the introduction of the monster evil of foreign interference in the shape of dual control; cowardly, although they are so brave that all the Europeans, we are assured, will run out of the country from this valiant rabblement of Alexandria and Cairo, the moment the Redcoats move away to their ships from the sand-hills of Ramleh and Helouan; corrupt, though men of the highest integrity and honour are known to every European who has lived any length of time in the country; idiotic, in the sense of being unable to manage their own affairs, or do anything properly, although they are among the shrewdest and most quick-witted of nations. But with these matters we have concern rather because the future of the Army is involved, than on account of there general political and moral relations. We maintain that there is not the smallest ground for the assertion that the forces now at the disposal of the Egyptian Government, in the Egyptian Army, Gendarmerie, and Police, under Sir E. Wood and the British officers, who have fairly won the hearts, as they have tended the bodies of their soldiers, and under Baker Pasha and his excellent subordinates would be inadequate without the support of the British troops to support the Khedive and his Ministers, and to protect all lawful authority in the exercise of its functions without the least risk of danger or failure. It is astonishing, to any one who has personal knowledge, or any knowledge of the exact relations of the British Army of Occupation in Egypt with the work of Government in that country, to read the language of the Times and other English journals, which write in the interests of the large number of people in this country who consider that we ought to occupy Egypt for an indefinite period. With the elaborate scheme of reorganisation of which the leading journal writes so hopefully, the Army has nothing whatever to do. All the work of the Government is conducted by native agency, or by agents who have no official relations with the British authorities in command of the Army. It was so even in Arabi's time. Taxes were collected, and agriculture was carried on throughout Egypt, from Alexandria to Assouan, as usual, and there was no disturbance of trade or commerce till the Fleet assembled in the harbour, and the exodus began, after the massacre which the presence of the men-of-war provoked. If the Government were to say that they did not intend to withdraw the troops at all, there would be at least the conceit of a distinct policy in their dealings, but to say that they intend to withdraw the troops at some period, but that they cannot do so now, because they fear an outbreak of rebellion or the revival of anarchy, is to invite a direct challenge to them for the production of evidence to justify the fear, and of grounds to show that the Egyptian Army organised under Sir E. Wood, and the Gendarmerie and Police under Baker Pasha, are worthless and inefficient. The declaration, moreover, implies that the Government consider the British troops in the Desert and at the cholera camps are associated with the Egyptian authorities in working out the reorganisation. If Sir E. Wood and Baker Pasha are of opinion that their troops and their police could not be depended upon to do their duty in supporting the Khedive's Government, should our Army be withdrawn, it may fairly be asked when it ever will be possible to depend on the Egyptian Army and Police at all? Suppose the answer is "never," then we have to consider that we have declared our Army is not to stay for ever. And then?

THE correspondence which was commenced last week in the Standard, under the head of "A Delicate Question," and signed "B.," necessarily evoked remonstrance from Naval officers. We should not have referred to the matter, knowing quite well that the precedence of the Navy is unquestionable, but the remarks in "B.'s" letter of the 14th inst. are too impolite to admit of being allowed to remain unnoticed by a service journal. Had "B." confined himself to argument only, Naval officers could have afforded to smile at his lack of historical knowledge. A resort to direct insult, however, alters the whole tenor of his communications, and he must either be influenced by supposed intentional slights by Naval officers, or the remarks of those who have observed with jealousy the position accorded the "service afloat" in recent national demonstrations. He speaks of "Blue-jackets" as "strangers," merely allowed the position of honour out of courtesy to brothers-in-arms; then, in an authoritative tone, asserts, "But since such an event has been misconstrued, it would hardly be permitted again, for none would wish to see the élite of the Army affronted by having 'Sailor Jack' preferred on land,—though he should, of course, be supreme on the high seas." We would point out that many officers of the Army, including some in the Household Troops, have brothers in the Navy, and the dignity of families is not affected thereby. We would remind him that our future King, H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, is proud of holding a commission in the Royal Naval Reserve; that the second son of our gracious Sovereign proudly holds a commission as an Admiral, and is only too anxious to serve afloat; while his Royal brother's second son promises to become a zealous young officer, and is devoted to his profession. These Royal scions are, we presume, included under the epithet "Sailor Jack," which "B." considers would affront the élite of the Army, were he allowed to take precedence of the latter in any future review. The question of Naval precedence has been raised on more than one occasion, resulting in that service being granted the position which its antiquity accords it. "B." may therefore be sure that its officers will not forego a right which nothing but a Royal command can overcome. A public scandal was saved on a memorable occasion nearly twelve years ago, by the judicious action of a member of the Royal Family, when, in a Royal procession, an attempt was made to displace the Navy. There is not the slightest doubt that the Navy is the sole "standing force" in the country. The constitutional character of the Navy has never been questioned, for, as Macaulay says, this "best protection of the island against foreign enemies is powerless against civil liberty." It has been ever recognised as "the right arm of England," and her "natural bulwark and defence." The Army, from year to year, depends for its legal existence on the Mutiny Act. The laws governing the discipline and order of the two services furnish important points of difference. The Sovereign is the authority over "all forces by sea and land," and has the supreme command of the Fleet. Macklin says, "An English man-of-war can speak all languages. She is the best interpreter and most profound politician in this island; she was always Oliver Cromwell's Ambassador; she is the wisest Minister of State that ever existed, and never tells a lie; nor will she suffer the proudest Frenchman, or Spaniard, or Dutchman to bamboozle her, or give her a saucy answer." The toast "The Army and Navy" we believe only dates from the close of the Crimean War. The antiquity of a "Standing Navy" dates from the reign of Henry VII., who devised it to avoid the inconvenience of raising and hiring ships in sudden conjunctures, as well as to provide a permanent protection for the extending commerce of the country. The Great Harry was constructed by him about 1488. Henry VIII. in 1512 appointed Commissioners of the Navy, established three Royal yards, Woolwich, Deptford, and Chatham, and added largely to the Fleet. James, Duke of York, was created Lord High Admiral in 1660. On the other hand, it is recorded that a "Standing Army" mainly arose only in the reign of Charles II. in 1661, in consequence of the extinction of the feudal system, and five regiments of infantry were established by him. His successor, James II., introduced several cavalry regiments, but the regular Army is certainly about 200 years younger than the regular Navy.

WE hope we may without offence express the opinion that the siege and the defence of Paris were not on pure military merits very great achievements, though the political results were enormous. They were not illustrated by any heavy fighting such as that which distinguished the operations before the investment of the capital or the battles in which the Germans forced Bazaine back upon Metz, and as a bare abstract fact, the most remarkable circumstance connected with the siege was that an army of some 200,000 soldiers was enabled to starve out a great city which mustered within its walls 500,000 armed men, if not combatants. That siege is, as far as we know, unique in military history. The fact is, indeed, in direct opposition to the theories of war-making, for it has been held by all the great masters that a strong place cannot be invested by a force inferior in strength to the garrison. The siege was, at all events, most interesting and instructive. If the city had not been fortified, it must have surrendered after the defeat of the 13th Corps, under Vinoy, which made an abortive but not unworthy attempt to check the advance of the Crown Prince's Army on Versailles on September 19. The forts and the continuous lines of rampart certainly kept the Germans out till the city was starved into capitulation. Several considerable sorties were made with the object of breaking the investment; but when Metz surrendered, and the Army of the Red Prince was free to deal with the levies of the Republic on the Loire and in the north, to break up Garibaldian rabblements, and to drive the irregular régiments de marche and swarms of irregulars under Bourbaki, to be interned in Switzerland, it was obvious that there was no prospect of saving the capital, unless the French levies could put the enemy to rout, and drive them in disorder to the Rhine. When Von der Tann was driven out of Orleans by Aurelle de Paladines, one gleam of light broke through the gloom which settled on the valley of the Seine from September, 1870, till February, 1871, but it was the last ray of hope which flashed through the long wintry night of her distress, the only rift in the storm-clouds athwart which the weary eye of France looked in vain for help or comfort to all the quarters of the earth. If the enceinte saved Paris from the shame of immediate surrender, the walls hampered the defence, in so far as they impeded any great sortie on an extended front. Every concentration of the French to force their way out was visible to the enemy, and the deployments of their columns towards the Seine, whether from under cover of Valérien or of Charenton, or from the valley towards Meudon, and Fontenoy aux Roses, &c., was so restrained, that the Germans had always time to concentrate respectable forces on the points about to be assailed. The sortie of November 30—December 2 was exceedingly energetic, but the fates fought against the French. The weather was desperately severe. There was hard frost, there was deep snow, and there was a rapid thaw, but the French made a tremendous effort, and nearly annihilated the Würtemburgers in the presque isle between the Seine and the Marne, whence, however, they could not emerge. The sortie of January 19 from Valérien towards Buzenval was feebler; its failure sealed the fate of Paris. The episode of Le Bourget was striking, but unimportant, and the losses of the French and of the Germans in these actions were comparatively insignificant when the numbers engaged in them are taken into account. The German line was, however, always in a state of tension, and at one time the head-quarters at Versailles were held in readiness for an instantaneous move, and for a campaign in the open. It must for ever remain an open question whether the effect of the bombardment per se would have opened up the enceinte sufficiently to have enabled the Germans to give the assault with a certainty of success. Issy and Vanvres were certainly demolished, and a large gap was made in the defences, but it was not in a vital place. The end can scarcely be a matter of dispute, but Paris once liberated and free for a time would not certainly have submitted, without a tremendous struggle, to reinvestment, had the Germans sought it. But an assault on a city with a savage, furious population, apt in street fighting, could not have been at all inviting to the most daring General. It might have failed. France, nevertheless, was so broken that ultimate success in the struggle could scarcely have been within the limits of possibility. There was no Napoleon to electrify the defence. Gambetta, dropped from his balloon, and M. Freycinet, strategising en amateur, were bad substitutes for a military genius who would have had to triumph over moral as much as physical difficulties, and so the end came; but the Parisians are right in raising the memorial at Courbevoie, if it be only to stimulate them to prevent a repetition of the siege it commemorates.

THE Newfoundland Fisheries have been a fruitful source of difference between England and France for several centuries. Nevertheless, few Englishmen know anything of the origin and cause of the long-standing difficulty. Prior to the year 1879, it was the custom for every English man-of-war attached to the North-American Squadron to be detailed in turn to protect the fisheries on the coast of Newfoundland, and in this manner Naval officers came to study the question from having, at times, most important international duties to perform. At the present moment, however, three of the ships under the orders of Vice-Admiral Sir John Commerell, V.C., are doing duty off Newfoundland. This clearly shows that the state of affairs between the French and English fishermen, as also between the French and the British subjects inhabitants of the island, cannot be very satisfactory. But so little is known for certain in this country regarding what goes on in Newfoundland, that it is not too much to assert that very few persons know anything about the island except those Naval officers who have served on its coasts, and a few diplomatic and colonial officials who have from time to time to look into the complaints made periodically by the French. Newfoundland is an island, in size as large as Scotland, and one of the most important of her Majesty's colonial possessions. Lying, as it does, off the American coast, the great majority of Englishmen labour under the belief that our difficulties in Newfoundland waters are chi[illegible]ith citizens of the United States. Such, however, is not the case. That we have had occasional misunderstandings with our American cousins, we do not attempt to deny. In the Long Harbour, Fortune Bay, affair, a mere dispute between fishermen was termed an "outrage," and through mismanagement on the part of our Government, an affair which 5,000 dollars would have more than amply covered cost this country £15,000. As a rule, however, we have nothing to complain of as regards the Americans. They go to Newfoundland chiefly for bait, for which they pay a good price, and are, therefore, at all times sure of a hearty welcome from the half-starved natives of the South Coast. It is with the French alone that we have any trouble. In no part of the world are our relations with a foreign Power so strained as they are with the French at this moment in Newfoundland. The position in which the two countries stand in regard to each other on that coast is so anomalous, that any intemperate remark or hasty action on the part of the commanders of her Majesty's ships detailed to protect British interests in those waters might compromise the Government most seriously, and possibly bring about the gravest results. Hence the custom of constantly relieving the ship or ships detailed for the protection of the fisheries has many disadvantages, which do not appear to be in any way compensated for by the sole advantage claimed for the system, that of enabling ships' companies to recuperate, after a lengthened spell in the unhealthy climate of the West Indies. For these constant changes have taken officers away from the station just as they were beginning to master the intricacies of the question; and they were nearly invariably replaced by men who, up to the time of their arrival on the coast of Newfoundland, have been in profound ignorance of the nature of the duties required of them, and of the various and complicated treaties bearing on the subject. In days gone by, one British ship was sufficient to protect the fisheries round that island, but at this moment three are required,—the Tenedos, Flamingo, and Foam. Not only do the French claim the exclusive right of fishing and curing on the coast, but they have stopped colonial vessels putting into the ports there situated; they have driven the inhabitants inland, stopped mines, and barred the mouths of the rivers with salmon-nets, in defiance of the laws of the colony, and have thereby prevented the fish running up to spawn. This has stopped breeding and ruined many splendid rivers, to the serious loss of the colonists. The French have also protested against three Newfoundland companies carrying on their trade of potting lobsters on the coast, on which they have the right to land. The French have thus been often enabled to advance claims with impunity and with success which had no earthly right. On a future occasion, we shall go more fully into the particulars of the question.

HOW is it that Garrison Artillery is so unpopular amongst junior officers? It is unpopular because batteries of this arm are seldom kept complete as regards subalterns. The strength of a battery in officers is a Major, a Captain, and two Lieutenants. In former days, there were three Subalterns on the establishment, but for reasons of economy, the third Subaltern was abolished a few years ago, on the understanding, however, that the remaining two should always be available for duty. Under the present system of giving cadets commissions before their educational career is finished, how can this be provided for? For the first six months after being commissioned, the young officer goes through a course at Woolwich and Shoeburyness; but as he is an officer, in order that he may draw his pay, he must be borne on the strength of some battery, and more often than not he is posted as the second Subaltern to a garrison battery. Here he remains, on paper only, until his education is finished, the battery, in the meantime, being deprived of his services. The remedy is not to commission cadets until they are fit to join their batteries. This would be better for the cadet, and certainly far better for the service. It is a questionable advantage that young officers should herd together at Woolwich, where they are "nobody's children;" it is an unquestionable disadvantage that the batteries should lose their services. The country believes that when officers are paid, as such, it is to perform officers' duties, but in this case these young gentlemen are paid as officers, but really are only continuing their cadet training. Then, again, when the battery has borne with its paper ornament for six months, and the one luckless Subaltern thinks he sees a helpmate within measurable distance, his hopes are rudely dashed to the ground by the young officer being taken away and posted to a battery elsewhere, and replaced by another paper ornament who is just commencing his officer-cadet course. And so it goes on. It may be remarked by some that one subaltern is quite sufficient for a garrison battery, that the men are always employed, that there are no parades, &c. Let him who says this read the admirable essay which lately won the Royal Artillery Institution gold medal. He will there learn what a Garrison Artilleryman has to know, and therefore what an officer has to teach him. If, as in this essay is advocated, Artillerymen are to be taught by their own officers the higher branches of their profession, those officers must be realities, not paper men. It seems to us that there are two courses open. Either let us revert to the three subalterns per battery, and continue the officer-cadet system, or abolish the latter, and so make garrison batteries what the Estimates lead one to suppose they are,—a reality, not a sham.

THE value of Mounted Infantry having been clearly demonstrated in Egypt, it is time that the War Office considered the arrangements it is desirable to make, in order that a body of men could be trained, equipped, and held in readiness for service as mounted infantry on an emergency. It is useless to form a corps of mounted infantry. Once this is done, the utility of foot soldiers on horseback is destroyed. They will become cavalry, will want a useless uniform, swords, sabretaches, &c. They will forget they are foot soldiers, and will soon merge into inferior cavalry. As Lord Wolseley says in his "Soldier's Pocket-book," mounted infantrymen should have "the fighting, training, and arms of an infantry soldier, and the rapidity of locomotion belonging to the hussar." We would suggest that regiments first on the roster for foreign service should send, say, twenty-five men, and an officer (if available) to Aldershot every year to go through a course of instruction in the duties of mounted infantry. Thus every regiment first for service would have a number of trained men who would only want the horses to become available for active employment with a force in the field. The men to be sent should be first-class shots, able to ride, well drilled in the duties of skirmishers, and should understand outpost duty thoroughly. The twenty-five men from each regiment should include, if possible, signallers, shoeing-smiths, saddlers, and men who have gone through a course of surveying and reconnaissance. There are many men in each infantry regiment who have at one time or another had to do with horses. These it would be most desirable to secure. The dress should be simple. We would recommend that they should wear similar cord breeches and gaiters to those worn in the Egyptian campaign, ammunition boots, kersey frocks, the new pattern ammunition pouches, and sword bayonets. During the last campaign, the mounted infantry slung their rifles across their backs when on the march, and carried them in their right hands on the thigh when close to the enemy. Martini-Henry rifles are indispensable, and a piece of leather round the barrel where held by the left hand is necessary. Revolvers should also be carried, and the men taught the use of them. If these few men from each regiment are thus trained, in the event of a war breaking-out they could be embodied without delay, and a splendid force of true mounted infantry, viz., men who can shoot and ride, would be ready at once to go abroad. At the head-quarters at Aldershot a properly organised staff should be maintained, consisting of a commandant, an assistant-commandant, and four captains, with a staff serjeant-major, four company serjeant-majors, four serjeants, and also a ridingmaster and quartermaster. These would form a nucleus, and upon them would fall the duty of preparing and equipping corps—whatever number might be required—which were detached for active service. It must be evident to any person with the slightest knowledge of the art of war, that in modern campaigns mounted infantry must be largely used. This is a fact which nobody could for a moment dispute. The only question is,—How can we best secure the services of such a force on an emergency at small cost, without permanently increasing our mounted arms? We consider the plan proposed the only feasible one; and it has this great merit, that it would be a system capable of easy expansion. There is no man more fitted for the post of commandant than Major Percy Barrow, C.M.G., the "father of mounted infantry," as he is called. Major Hallam Parr, C.M.G., might fairly be offered the post of assistant-commandant, and four really good men should be secured to take the company commands. The subalterns would be furnished from the infantry regiments which sent detachments to undergo the course, and a small "i" after their names in the Army List would serve to show that they had undergone instruction, and were available for duty. Our suggestions, if carried out, would not involve any great outlay of money, and would at once get over all the objections which have been raised against the maintenance of a force of mounted infantry in peace time. After the splendid work done by the mounted infantry both in South Africa and Egypt, the question of the training cannot be allowed longer to remain in abeyance. We have a very small army, but we ought to strive by every means in our power to render the forces we have at our command efficient. One of the great difficulties against which we have to contend is that of cavalry; we have no cavalry reserve worthy of the name. Then we are bound to look the matter in the face, and endeavour to supply the want. This we can do by means of mounted infantry. Let us, then, set about to place that force on such a footing that it would have a chance, at any rate, of holding its own if suddenly brought face to face with a European enemy. Both in South Africa and in Egypt we had pitted against us troops which were only imperfectly organised and equipped. Against these, our mounted infantrymen, being ably led, were able to render valuable assistance. But it is absurd to suppose that these men—a sort of "scratch crew," with little or no training—could render effective service against a European army. It should be our aim, therefore, to introduce such changes as would ensure the officers and men receiving at least an insight into the work which would be required of them on service. The plan we propose would, it seems to us, get over the difficulty most effectually. We trust, therefore, that the pressing importance of the subject will recommend our scheme to the favourable notice of the Secretary of State for War, and that in the next Estimates provision might be made for the establishment of a depôt and training-school for mounted infantry at Aldershot on the lines which we have laid down. The difficulties which have opposed the adoption of any scheme as yet have been many and almost insurmountable. The fact is that a trained body of men on a separate establishment is not a mounted infantry at all, as it does not form an integral portion of the arm to which it is supposed to belong. Therefore, any scheme which would place mounted infantry on a separate footing at once establishes this impediment to success. Too much has generally been desired when a scheme has been proposed; but when necessity has called for the organisation of such a force in the field, the results have been so satisfactory that immediately other schemes have been started for the organisation of a permanent body of such men. But if such a force is necessary, the very name of mounted infantry points to the solution of the difficulty. It should essentially be a force composing an integral portion of the infantry—a force that should not appear until the hour of necessity made it necessary for a general to employ it. The material for rapid organisation is all that should be required of it, and this could be attained by providing every battalion with a certain number of trained men on the plan we suggest. Fifty men in each battalion would be a very fair proportion. Thus a small force moving in the field would, to a certain extent, be independent of cavalry for the purposes of reconnaissance. It was found in Egypt that mounted infantry would be of use, and they were organised in one day, and were of great service; but if it had been found that a greater number had been necessary, and if the force had not been so favourably situated for obtaining horses, the difficulty would have been greatly increased of raising such a force.

It appears that the Admiralty have decided to send hospital ships to sea, under the Geneva Cross, to accompany squadrons in action.

Mr. Gourley will, on Thursday, ask the Secretary to the Admiralty if he will be good enough to inform the House whether the structural strength of the ocean cruiser Iris, in framing, main, and shell plating, is more or less than that of vessels of similar size, and classed 100 A 1 in the merchant service, say, of the White Star Line. And, if it be correct that her coal endurance is only equal to seven days in ordinary weather, whereas merchant ships of similar size and greater speed possess a coal endurance of over thirty days, besides cargo.

Lieutenants A. H. Hire, W. S. Gordon, and A. G. Barton, of the Royal Marine Artillery, have joined the College at Portsmouth, for the purpose of going through the torpedo course. It is understood that some more of the formerly rejected officers are to follow.

Mr. Gourley will, on Friday, ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether he is aware that the system under which the Navy is supplied with guns from the Ordnance Department of the Army causes dangerous delay, and that, in consequence, French ships-of-war in their equipment of breech-loading guns are at the moment far in advance of our own. And, whether he will during the recess endeavour so to reorganise the Ordnance Department, that in future the manufacture and designs of guns for the Navy may be placed directly under the control of the Admiralty, in place of the War Office.

In appointing Admiral Peyron to succeed M. Charles Brun as Minister of Marine, the French Government has returned to its old traditions, and a Naval officer is once more at the head of the Navy. Since the fall of the Empire, France has seen many Ministers of Marine; first, Admiral Pothuau, who was succeeded in 1873 by Admiral Dompierre d'Hornoy, who gave way to Admiral de Montaignac in 1874; then came Admiral Fourichon in 1876, Admiral Gicquel des Touches in 1877, Admiral Pothuau back again in 1878, Admiral Jauréguiberry in 1879, Admiral Cloué in 1880, Captain Gougeard in 1881, Admiral Jauréguiberry a second time in 1882, M. Charles Brun in February, 1883, and now Admiral Peyron, who has seen a good deal of active and administrative service.

During the illness of Captain John D'Arcy, of her Majesty's ship Duncan, at Sheerness, the duties of flag-captain to the Commander-in-Chief at the Nore will be discharged by Captain Lord Walter Kerr, of the Medway Steam Reserve.

Orders have been received by the Government Dockyard at Dantzig for the immediate construction of a training-ship, which will be built of iron, sheathed with wood. Length between the perpendiculars, 178 ft. 4 in.; breadth, extreme, 43 ft. 4 in.; depth, 31 ft. The Government works will supply her with auxiliary compound surface-condensing engines of 700 indicated horse-power, with a lifting screw, for though the vessel is frigate-rigged and mainly intended to cruise under sail alone, it has been considered advisable to fit her with engines for the purpose of instruction. It is proposed to have her ready for commission by the end of March, 1886.

We regret to hear that, on the arrival of the Neptune at Spithead on Thursday last, Captain W. H. Maxwell, in command, was so indisposed as to render it necessary that he should be removed to Haslar Hospital.

We understand that the German authorities have just concluded experiments with Cammell, compound, 10-in. armour-plates, which are said to offer 40 per cent. more resistance to penetration than any other plate yet tried.

There will shortly be laid down at the Stockholm Government Dockyard an ironclad turret-ship of the following dimensions:—Length on water-line, 226 ft.; breadth of beam, 48 ft. 8 in.; draught of water, 15 ft. 6 in.; displacement, 2,622 tons. The vessel will be supplied by a Swedish firm with twin-screw compound engines, which are estimated to propel her at a speed of 13 knots per hour. The supply of coal carried in the bunkers will suffice for steaming a distance of 850 miles, at 12 knots per hour. The heavy armament, consisting of two 10-in. Armstrong breech-loading guns, will be carried in a revolving turret, which is plated with 12-in. compound armour. Three 6-in. breech-loaders, and a number of machine-guns, are mounted on deck. The vessel will also be provided with discharging apparatus for Whitehead torpedoes.

Official contradictions abroad are apparently of as little value and as little to be relied upon as they are in this country. We announced some time ago that the Chinese ironclad Ting Yuen would not, after all, leave Kiel for China for some time to come. Thereon the Times published the following telegram from Berlin:—"The Chinese Embassy here gives an absolute denial to the rumours about the Ting Yuen, and states that the apprehensions of war in leading circles in China are not so great as to exclude the possibility of the speedy starting of the Chinese ironclad. It is added that there is no sign that the Pekin Government regards the situation as more threatening than it was a week ago. Still, it is evident that the Chinese authorities are very mistrustful of the intentions of the French with regard to the vessel." But what are the facts? The Ting Yuen has been laid up at Kiel, and an insurance against fire for the next two months has been effected upon her.

Cronstadt was visited the other day by the Khan of Khiva, the Princes of Bokhara, and the Turcoman deputation from Merv. The weather being rather boisterous, the Khan was so overcome during the run from St. Petersburg to Cronstadt, that he had to rest awhile at the Club before he could proceed on his round of inspection. Having recovered, he was shown the dockyard, some of the men-of-war, and the forts, and returned to the capital, viâ the shorter water-route of Oranienbaum, greatly impressed with his glimpse at an European fleet.

The ships of the Channel Squadron, under the command of Sir William Dowell, have completed the summer cruise. The Minotaur and Neptune have joined the Sultan at Portsmouth; the Agincourt, Northumberland, and Achilles have gone to Plymouth. Defects will not be made good at present, as it is intended that the Squadron shall reassemble with as little delay as possible for its autumn cruise.

At a lecture at Cronstadt, some time ago, Lieutenant-General Pestitch, the leading Russian artillerist, whose patent gun-carriage is used in most of the Baltic and Black Sea coast defences, drew a parallel between the action of the English Fleet at Sebastopol and at Alexandria. He expressed the opinion that the Allied Fleet proved itself of very little value in bombarding. After the Crimean War no fleet had had an opportunity of showing what could be done by ships against coast defences up to the bombardment of Alexandria. The resistance of the Egyptians was of the most contemptible character, and he could not give credence to our official reports that so many of them were killed. "As for the skill displayed by the English, we cannot, judging from the results, speak highly of it. At a close distance, and operating with rifled artillery for a space of five hours, the three principal ironclad frigates were able to inflict only the most trifling damage on the fort they attacked. As a matter of fact, owing to bad marksmanship, the shot and shell of the Fleet missed the fortifications, and struck the town, hence the terrible damage experienced by the latter." The injuries wrought against the Egyptian guns mounted en barbette provoked the opinion that, considering the enormous cost of guns now-a-days, and the trouble of getting them into position, greater efforts must be made to protect them, and that the policy Russia has adopted for some time past in this direction must be still more extended.

Naval examinations are conducted on strange principles unknown elsewhere. It appears peculiarly hard on Sub-Lieutenants that their final class in Gunnery should be influenced to their disadvantage, though not to their advantage, by that obtained in Torpedoes. This is the result of partially amalgamating the two subjects, which should of course be either included under the one head of gunnery, or entirely dissociated. The former is the only plan which commends itself, and it is to be hoped that it will soon be adopted, as it has long been in the case of Lieutenants qualifying as gunnery officers. That there should be a minimum for a "pass" in such an important subject is only right; but that a "third" in Torpedoes should involve a drop from "first" to "third" in gunnery—as it has in more than one instance—is obviously wrong, and exceedingly disheartening to young officers who are working for their "three ones."

A Sebastopol correspondent writes:—"The construction of the two ironclads for the Black Sea Fleet by the subsidised Black Sea Steam Navigation Company will have the effect of developing the building establishment of that association into a regular dockyard. Already the establishment is of greater importance than is generally assumed in England. Started in 1859, with a grant of £75,000 towards building operations, the place has had upwards of £120,000 spent upon it since. It consists of two slips, capable of accommodating four steamers at one time, with workshops filled with the most improved machinery from England, including a seven-ton steam-hammer. In winter 30 steamers at one time are repaired at the yard. Up to 1879 the Company confined its operations simply to repairing its own ships; but the charges of apathy brought against it by the Press, and the pressure exercised by the Government, have caused it to undertake the building of steamers since. As a result of this change of policy, 11 steamers, the largest of 700 tons, have been built, and 14 pairs of engines, the largest of 170 nominal horse-power. A thousand artisans are employed at the yard. Last year having sufficiently developed the establishment to undertake large work, the Company applied to Prince Alexis for permission to build a man-of-war. After some negotiation, a contract, very advantageous for the Company, was drawn up, by which the Company binds itself to construct two ironclads during the next five years, and further to manufacture the massive iron-plating on the spot. A rolling mill, with new machinery from England, will have to be constructed for this purpose. While these two ironclads are being built, the Government will hasten on the construction of the new dry dock, costing £250,000, and built on the site of the one destroyed during the siege, in order that it may be ready to accommodate the first ironclad directly it is launched. The huge floating iron dock, built by an English firm some years ago, will remain at Sebastopol after the completion of the dock ashore, but will be solely used for the popoffkas and mercantile steamers."

When we announced last week that the Admiralty had, on the recommendation of Admiral Luard's Committee, set the examinations of Greenwich College aside, and accepted the rejected probationers for the Royal Marine Artillery, we had no idea that their Lordships were about to make the rejected of 1882 regimentally senior to the accepted of 1883. Lieutenant Conway Gordon has just cause to complain that he, who passed the severe test [illegible] the examination this year, and who worked to pass, so as to secure a certain position open to him on the List through the rejections of 1882, has had that place taken from him, and has had two officers placed over his head who failed last year to pass the examination he went through this year successfully. The Admiralty have admitted that they are in fault by setting their own established examination aside, and accepting rejected probationers. But they have no right to make these gentlemen senior to the next probationer who, seeing the course clear by the former failures, works hard to secure a certain place. These two places will alter the whole future career of Lieutenant Conway Gordon in the service.

The new Dover Harbour recommended by the Committee will cost about £1,050,000, or about £200,000 more than that originally designed, and we would hail the prospect of having a large, roomy harbour at such an important, if not vital point, in the Channel, with the greatest pleasure and thankfulness, if it did not take quite so long to realise it. Sixteen years is a long period in the life of a nation now-a-days, and many things may happen before the harbour is complete. The Naval Staff will hurry up and push on the works, and it is the Treasury alone that will be hard to move.

Sir E. J. Reed's report on the Daphne disaster is marked by some original views, which may be commended to the notice of shipbuilders. Cuique in sua arte credendum est. It is not satisfactory or pleasant to sea-going folk to be told, on such an authority, that there are many great ships belonging to large companies which are in danger of capsizing, because of their inherent inability to float upright without ballast or cargo. The subject is one of the gravest interest, especially to a country which must depend largely on big ships belonging to private companies for the transport of its soldiers and stores in war time, as was the case in the Egyptian Expedition.

A Russian officer, writing from Portsmouth to the Cronstadt Vestnik, points out that Russian men-of-war use the largest cartridge afloat for saluting purposes, and consequently make more noise than the vessels of any other Power on entering a foreign harbour. This is all very well from a spread-eagle point of view, but he thinks that Russian prestige would not suffer if Russian men-of-war were a little more modest, and on this ground, as well as on that of economy, suggests that the quantity of gunpowder should be diminished.

The Grand Duke Alexis has issued an order to the effect that the four torpedo-boats of the Batoum type, now being constructed in England and France for the Black-Sea Fleet, are to receive the designations of Soukhum, Gagri, Poti, and Gelendjik. At the dockyard at St. Petersburg, preparations are being made for the construction of a wooden training corvette, propelled by sails, for the Marine School. The vessel will be of 1,500 tons, and carry nine 4-pounders and one 3-pounder. She will be exclusively used for service in the Baltic.

Mr. Gordon Drury, son of General G. Drury, of the Royal Marines, has obtained a sufficient number of marks in his recent examination before the Civil Service Commissioners to qualify him for a commission in the Royal Marine Light Infantry. Mr. Drury is the first entry under the annual nomination given by the Admiralty to sons of officers in the corps for a qualifying examination without competition.

The Russian Admiralty have ordered two gunboats for the Siberian Flotilla of the firm of Crichton, of Abo, a native manufactory much favoured with Government contracts of late. The vessels will be 180 ft. long, will have two screws, and will carry one 9-in. gun, one 6-in., and four 4-pounders. A transport has also been ordered to be built at Cronstadt for the Baltic, in place of the Rurick, which was condemned last year.

We learn from St. Petersburg that the King of the Sandwich Islands has conferred the Order of Kalakua of the First Class on Admiral Shestiakoff, the Russian Minister of Marine.

A torpedo-vessel for the Spanish Government has just been completed by the Weser Company, of Bremen, who have applied to the authorities for permission to despatch the vessel through the Eider Canal to the Bay of Eckernfoerde, where the trial-trips will be made.

British officers in command of single ships or squadrons labour under a great disadvantage when compared with their Continental colleagues, for, whilst all mishaps, even the smallest, which may occur to them during a cruise are immediately published in every European paper, all accidents befalling foreign ships-of-war are (unless they amount to a catastrophe) kept religiously secret, both by the officers themselves and by the officials at home. It is well known that serious accidents have occurred to the French and German ironclad squadrons under Admirals Krantz and Von Wickede, yet only short and vague references have been made to them in the papers, though they were sufficiently serious to have afforded English papers themes for excuse and abuse for weeks together. When lying in the Piræus, a gun burst on board the French flagship, killing and wounding several men; and the German squadron now cruising in the North Sea and Baltic has had its full share of collisions, groundings, &c. The fact that such occurrences can be hushed up in the way they are, can only be ascribed to the apathy with which Naval affairs are regarded on the Continent, except when they concern the English Navy. An official denial has been given to the alarming rumours current at Cronstadt to the effect that the monitor Lava, one of the eleven of the Ericson type, belonging to the Baltic Fleet, had foundered, with 20 hands, off Revel. It is admitted, however, that the gunboat Doja has been ashore on the Finnish coast, receiving injuries that will incapacitate her for further service during the navigation season; and that the floating battery Netron Menya is laid up at Sveaborg with a damaged ram, having struck against a rock while steaming into a roadstead. The latter vessel was in collision with a Norwegian barque a fortnight before. As already reported, a Swedish monitor has foundered.

The reports from China and Tonquin must be accepted with reserve, but there can be no doubt that the French will be able to dispose of the Black Flags very easily. Such heterogeneous columns as Colonel Badens led against the Annamites at Hanoi on Aug. 6, "300 Marines, 300 natives, and 600 Catholic convicts," according to the special correspondent of the Standard. Catholic convicts, full of faith, provided with breech-loaders, and inflamed by the love of liberty and loot, must be formidable foes. If the French, however, endeavour to force the Chinese Government to renounce the claim of the Emperor to the suzerainty of Annam, they will have to wage war with a very different Power, and the China of 1883 is very different from the China of 1857.

Who was "the representative of a seaport where Naval and Military offences are not of unfrequent occurrence," who, according to the Evening News, was "amongst the first to acknowledge Marwood," the hangman's, presence in the House on Thursday night, and also shook him warmly by the hand? It must be one of the many jokes of our excellent contemporary, but we must say, if the man was allowed to visit the House of Parliament, escorted by Inspector Denning, to write his autograph on House of Peers notepaper, and distribute them, with his carte-de-visite, "William Marwood, Executioner, Church Lane, Horncastle, Lincolnshire, England," it was an unworthy and disgusting proceeding, and discreditable to all concerned.

Mr. Dawnay will next Session call attention to the evidence given before the Committee of Inquiry into the Army Hospital Services with regard to the working of those services during the Egyptian campaign, and also to the change recommended in the Report of the Committee with regard to the position of the medical officers in the Household Troops, and move a resolution.

We are informed that this week trials of a new black gunpowder, styled Diana gunpowder, made at Rousahl, in Westphalia, were conducted by Mr. Charles Boswell, and that the results were very favourable. A 12-bore gun, with choke barrels charged with $3\frac{1}{4}$ drachms of "Diana" powder and $1\frac{1}{8}$ oz. of No. 6 chilled shot in Eley's green, gas-tight cartridge-cases, placed at 40 yards; on the 30-in. circle from the right barrel 230, and from the left 242 shots, which were very evenly distributed on the plates. There was very little smoke, and the recoil was scarcely perceptible. A second round produced similar results. The right barrel pierced 22 sheets of brown paper, and the left 26. The powder is said to be suitable for military and sporting purposes.

We observe the arrangements for the Indian reliefs have been made on the supposition that the present force in Egypt will be maintained. The 47th at Gibraltar and the 104th at Malta on departure for India are to be relieved not by battalions from Egypt, but by the 82nd and the 103rd from home. It may be observed the linked battalions of the two latter regiments, viz., the 40th and the 102nd, are in Bengal and Ceylon respectively, and are not to come home for years. So much for the system of Territorial regiments, with one battalion at home and the other abroad.

We hear a very large proportion of officers failed in the recent examinations for promotion to captain and major, chiefly tactics.

The French War Minister has just issued an order which is very popular with the Army. He has decided that officers when off duty may appear in mufti. This privilege was up to the present extended only to Paris, although in some Army Corps it was tolerated. Of course, there be croakers who think that this measure will be fatal to discipline; but we see that the Progrès Militaire heartily approves of it, on the ground that General Thibaudin has slain a prejudice and a fiction.

The French are highly pleased to see that the conscription in Alsace does not work as smoothly as the German authorities would like. They say that Alsatians and Lorrainers will not serve in the German Army, because they know that in the regiment they will meet Badeners who bombarded Strasburg, Bavarians the heroes of Bazeilles, and Prussians who assassinated, burned, and pillaged through the greater portion of France thirteen years ago. We were under the impression that the German soldiers who invaded France had long ago passed into the Reserves.

At last, apparently, the authorities at the War Office have discovered the injustice of proceeding with the promotion of officers in the new territorial regiments according to the rules laid down by Mr. Childers in the Royal Warrant of March 11, 1882. That Warrant declares that, in the case of officers appointed to the Army before April 8, 1873, the first step of promotion after July 1, 1881 (provided it be obtained before July 1, 1888), shall be given in the old separate battalions, but that the officers of the two battalions then come on to one list for promotion in the whole regiment, with the exception of the comparatively few cases of officers who happened to be either senior Captain or senior Major of their battalions on June 30, 1881, to whom is granted the favour of two steps in the old battalion before coming on to the general list of the regiment. Now there is at least one of these new regiments where a Lieutenant-Colonelcy has been vacant for some months, and there are also other regiments where vacancies in other ranks have now been open for a considerable time, although, in nearly all these cases, the officers next for promotion, in accordance with the provisions of the Royal Warrant, are fully qualified in every respect for advancement. Then, what is the cause of the delay? Simply that the authorities see the difficulty of passing over deserving officers in vacancies to which their title was, a little over two years ago, as clear as day. Every officer who entered the Army before November 1, 1871, joined his regiment with the hope and prospect of some day commanding it. But first came the abolition of Purchase, and following that, the introduction of compulsory retirement by age. This, of course, immediately cut off the chance of commanding his regiment from many a promising officer, and filled his breast with indignant disappointment. Then came the rumour of amalgamation, and on April 8, 1873, the "Linking Order" was issued. So unpopular with the Army was the idea that an officer was liable to be transferred from his own regiment and comrades, and from the men who were accustomed to serve under him, to a regiment about which he knew nothing and whose officers he did not even know by name, that young subalterns, who had entered the Army after the order had come into operation, actually declined promotion when it entailed their being transferred to the "linked battalion." Finally, Mr. Childers, with a full knowledge of the unpopularity of the system, proceeded to accomplish the fulfilment of the pet scheme of Liberal Army Reformers by the nominal amalgamation of each pair of "linked battalions" into one territorial regiment, with one list for promotion after the first step, thereby destroying for ever, in the case of a very large number of good officers, the hope of obtaining the command of their old regiments. The fact of the right of promotion in their old battalions of officers who entered before the Linking Order of April 8, 1873, was fully admitted in the Royal Warrant, by granting to each of them one step in his own battalion after the amalgamation. Then why not concede the whole? When Purchase was abolished, compensation was granted, by the return, on retirement, of the full amount of the purchase money. Acquired rights, also, were acknowledged by the payment of "over-regulation" money. And it was urged on Mr. Childers that he should, in a similar manner, grant the full right of promotion in separate battalions to all officers who entered before the issue of the Linking Order, until they were either retired or in command of their own battalions. But no. This act of justice would delay the final and absolute amalgamation too long; consequently, justice was allowed to take one step only, and not that unless she could manage to take it within seven years from July 1, 1881. And so a brand-new warrant was launched on June 25, 1881, and no sooner launched than redocked, for by March 11, 1882, it had been discovered that it was absolutely necessary to make so many alterations in it, that it was on that date re-issued in a form almost unrecognisable by those who saw it on its first appearance. The article on promotion in the amalgamated regiments still remains, however, because, up to the present time, only such promotions have been made as are allowed by the Warrant to be given by separate battalions. But as soon as the question whether a deserving and excellent officer is to be passed over in his own battalion (which, on his joining it, was a distinct regiment in itself) by another officer, however good he may be, who never had any claim to, or expected promotion by such means, has fairly come to the front, a deadlock in promotion in the regiments concerned has at once ensued. This may certainly be taken as a hopeful augury that something may yet be done to alleviate the grievance of officers whose hopes were rapidly diminishing and their disgust as rapidly increasing, as one after another they saw their juniors in their linked battalion receiving their first step of promotion in that battalion, and thus superseding them in the whole regiment, and ultimately in their own battalion. It should at this time, in view of any half-and-half measures that may be anticipated, be impressed upon the authorities that the only real and satisfactory way of solving the difficulty is to disregard the length of time that may elapse before the final amalgamation of officers in one list can take place and to simply keep in view the justice of their cause, and therefore grant to all officers who entered their present regiments before April 8, 1873, the right of promotion in the battalion they then entered, until they are either in command of that battalion or have previously retired from the regiment.

It is stated that the reports which have up to the present time reached the German War Minister on the repeating mechanism as adapted to the Mauser rifle have been more favourable than was at first expected, and that some Fusilier regiments and Jäger battalions will be armed with the new weapon. The latter assertion is, no doubt, premature, as it is well known that the magazine arrangement, though working very well, on the whole, when carefully handled, does not as yet by any means fulfil all the requirements of a modern Military arm. It is, however, anticipated that the defects in the design of the magazine, which have been brought to light during the manœuvres, can be remedied without adding to the weight or deducting from the efficiency of the apparatus. The German War Office has likewise made exhaustive experiments with the same repeater tried by a French commission at Satory, and which is said to have been recommended for adoption in the French Army. The arm does not, however, appear to have found favour in the eyes of German experts, as it has not been issued to any troops for trial during the manœuvres.

Clause 26, Sec. V., of the Queen's Regulations for the Army, provides that "Whenever an officer is disadvantageously reported upon, he will be officially informed by the Military Secretary of the particulars of such report. If the result of the report is to disqualify the officer for further promotion, he will be so informed. If reported for reasons which may be removed by amendment or study, he will be cautioned, and, when more favourably reported upon, his claims may be reconsidered." This system has not been applied to the Royal Marine Corps, as it was stated in the House of Commons that there was a feeling among the officers that they should not be brought under it. Representations on the subject were, however, made to the Deputy-Adjutant-General at his recent inspection of the Divisions, and a wish was expressed that officers of the corps, disadvantageously reported upon, should receive similar caution to that given to their brethren in the Army. This appears to be but fair, and the request has, we believe, been brought about in consequence of several senior officers having lately been passed over for promotion without having received any intimation as to the cause.

Our neighbours have been thrown into a considerable state of excitement by an article in the Journal des Sciences Militaires on the subject of the concentration of the French Army, which has raised a cry of alarm, as if "the Volscians were coming o'er the wall." A great amount of ink has been shed upon the subject, and many disagreeable accusations have been bandied about. This is what has taken place. An officer belonging to the Permanent Staff of the Minister of War, and who aids in preparing military operations, published the other day a strategical study on the two great fortresses on the eastern frontier in the event of a mobilisation of the German Army. He said:—"It has been established that the heads of the German infantry columns would be able to appear before Verdun and Toul on the ninth day after a mobilisation, and that from the eighth day or sooner the cavalry advanced guards would have commenced the investment. If it be wished to oppose anything but dead walls to the enemy, it becomes absolutely necessary that the garrisons should be completed by the seventh day at the latest. And as the operations of mobilisation would certainly not be finished before the sixth day, it follows that the first trains despatched in the direction of the frontier would be able merely hastily to supply the most urgent wants of our strong places. Instead, then, of protecting our concentration, these strong places will have to be protected themselves, by the first elements of the active army corps reaching the spot. This constitutes an immense danger, and, for any one possessing a notion of the part played by permanent fortifications, une veritable monstruosité stratégique." These last words are underlined by the Staff officer, who then refers to the railway system, which he considers most defective in a military point of view. He arrives, therefore, at the following conclusions:—"Impossibility for the French armies to be beforehand with the Germans on the frontier. Necessity of withdrawing the centre of our strategical deployment at least three days' march behind the Meuse and the Moselle. In other terms, evacuation without fighting not only of all the zone situated to the east of the Moselle, but also of a strip of eighty miles broad to the west of that river, and moral superiority assured to the enemy at the opening of the campaign. This is a situation of extreme gravity, to which the attention of those who preside over the destinies of the country cannot be called too often." La République Française, which confesses that it knows nothing of the plans for the mobilisation of the Army, which are kept a profound secret, condemns the publication of this article, which, it says, will be translated and commented upon by all the foreign Military papers at St. Petersburg, in Berlin, in Vienna, in Rome, in Madrid, and in London, and will produce the most deplorable consequences. But, if the evil exists, if, in the event of a war with Germany, the Germans are in a position to prevent Verdun and Toul being garrisoned, the only deplorable consequences for France would be to leave this strategical monstrosity as it is, and not to draw attention to it. The article in question may have something to do with the visit of the French Minister of War to the north-east frontier, where he will doubtless study the question on the spot. There are naturally defects in the French system of mobilisation, arising out of political considerations which prevent the adoption of district recruiting. The French fear to have armies of Bretons, of Normans, of Burgundians, of Parisians, and so forth. The consequence is that to-day, as in the time of the Empire, a Breton soldier, if suddenly called up, instead of repairing to head-quarters at Nantes, would perhaps have to make his way to Toulon, and a Gascon be obliged to join his regiment in Flanders. Until this state of affairs ceases, the Germans will always be beforehand with the French, when it comes to mobilising. In a letter addressed to a French paper from Berlin, we find it stated that the detached forts by which all the strong places on the eastern frontier of France are flanked have for years past been the object of minute attention on the part of the German Staff, and that the German military writers have never ceased declaring that these forts will be of little use. It is supposed that the reason for running-down the detached forts was to slacken the ardour of the French, but as they have pushed on their works, the Germans are now sailing on another tack; they are studying how to take them, and for this purpose some siege manœuvres are about to commence at Graudenz, in eastern Prussia. Graudenz is to be besieged, and it is to be supposed that it is surrounded by detached forts. We were under the impression that detached forts were in vogue in Germany, and we have certainly read a good deal about the works with which both Metz and Strasburg have been engirdled. A propos to French fortresses, we see that the authorities of Verdun have just received from the War Minister the carriages upon which the four "guns of honour," given to the town in memory of its heroic defence in 1870, are to be placed. Perhaps this is the first tribute of the kind ever paid to a place which capitulated without waiting for an assault.

The Daily News remarks, regarding the controversy as to the precedence of the Navy over the Army, that "Priority was given to the former at the recent banquet at the Mansion House. This, it is said, was a departure from usage. We believe usage was followed. If not, an improper usage was abandoned, and a correct one was adopted. The question is not, as our correspondent supposes, one of the relative value of the two forces, of first or second lines of defence, but of antiquity. Owing to the early development of our Fleet, and the late origin of a Standing Army in England, the Navy is the senior service, and is recognised as such. The Secretary of State for War takes precedence, it is averred, of the First Lord of the Admiralty. Just so; because the First Lord of the Admiralty is simply a Commissioner for executing the office of Lord High Admiral, whose precedence, if the office were called out of commission, would be over that of the Secretary of State for War. In the same way, all Secretaries of State take precedence over the First Lord of the Treasury, who, though in fact Prime Minister, is in form only a Commissioner for executing the office of Lord High Treasurer. These are small points; but it is well to be accurate even in small things, especially when professional sensitiveness is involved. Owing possibly to the part which the infinitely little plays in human affairs, there are no quarrels so bitter as those of etiquette."

The Admiralty have decided that henceforth all Vavasseur mountings, whether broadside, revolving, or central-pivot, shall carry a protective shield. This arrangement will obviate the necessity of the port lid being used for defence against machine-gun and rifle fire, and consequently approval has been given to a proposal to reduce the thickness of these lids, as they will only be required to resist the wash of the sea.

In cases of casual leave, or leave given to men who will be checked of their pay, their Lordships have settled that it will in future only be requisite for pass note No. 4 to be signed by the master or foreman of the trade to which the man belongs, and countersigned by the timekeeper to show that the ticket had been duly deposited.—Portsmouth Times.

At the recent regatta of the Portsmouth Royal Corinthian Yacht Club, in Osborne Bay, the so-called "service yachts" competed for a cup given by Sir G. Phipps Hornby, the Commander-in-Chief, which was won by the Duchess, schooner, attached to the Duke of Wellington, the Asia Minor being a good second. There was also some keen racing between the Prince of Wales's Una boat and one belonging to Lord Charles Beresford, the former—sailed by Capt. Rose, of the Osborne—being eventually victorious.

The yard-arm electric light supplied to the Himalaya has proved insufficient, and experiments are being conducted with automatic arc lights.

Sloops of the Pelican class, which hitherto have carried only six guns, are in future to carry eight broadside guns, one field gun, and four machine guns.

DESERTION.

SIR,—In an article lately published in the Nineteenth Century, it was proved, from Government statistics, that an alarmingly large proportion of recruits deserted within a period of two years from their enlistment, and that the number who deserted before the expiration of their period of service was so great as to amount to something like 35 per cent. In the article referred to, the main reason assigned for this serious and immense per-centage was the insufficiency of pay given to the private soldier, and undoubtedly this has indirectly, if not directly, a great deal to do with it. For the small amount of pay, combined, perhaps, with other reasons, is the main cause why the rank and file of the English Army is composed of men of such inferior calibre, mentally and morally. I unhesitatingly assert that the chief reason of desertion is to be found in the fact that the recruits are mainly drawn from the lowest classes of society.[*] The majority of the men who, at the present time, are enrolled into the Infantry regiments are the offscourings of our population; the habitual drunkard, whose irregular habits have prevented his obtaining any constant or remunerative employment; the profane and idle lounger at street-corners, who in some weak or drunken moment has listened to the voice of the recruiting-serjeant; the dishonest clerk or tradesman's assistant; and in fact, every one whose life has become a burden to him, whose future is a blank, and who has no chance of gaining a living otherwise; men whose minds have become soddened with low debauchery, whose consciences are almost dead, men from whose lips a lie more easily falls than the truth, and in whose sight dishonesty is no sin, and to whom honour is unknown. This is a sad truth, but it is the truth.[†] There is as much coarseness and low brutality to be met with in a barrack-room as there is in one of the low public-houses in the famed "Tiger Bay" of the East-End of London. It should be no matter of surprise, then, that whilst the Army is composed of men of this stamp, that desertions should be frequent. Of a truth, enlistment in many cases simply means desertion, for to men never accustomed to any manner of regularity in their habits, or to any persistent application to work, the monotonous routine of a soldier's life, the constant drill and enforced labour very soon become so repugnant to their feelings, that they select what seems to them to be the best mode of release from their troubles, and on the first opportunity make their escape from the scene of their trials. The injury this class of soldier does to the service is by no means represented by his desertion, for that, were it not for the expense he has put the country to, might be regarded as a benefit, but he brings the Army into discredit. His riotous and unprincipled conduct earn for the service by no means an enviable reputation, so that respectable young men are often debarred from enlisting; whilst most parents of the well-conducted working-class regard a son as irretrievably ruined if he be rash enough to succumb to a desire to wear a red jacket, or be overcome by the plausible arguments of some crafty recruiting-serjeant. And not only outside is his pernicious influence felt, but in the regiment itself its destructive power is plainly perceptible. A good many young men enlist because, to express it in their own language, they have a "mind to soldiering." And this class of recruit is frequently drawn from the comparatively innocent inhabitants of country districts, who perhaps imagine that "soldiering" consists in strutting about in a smart tunic, in captivating scores of the fair sex, and of indulgence to the full in eating and drinking. From such men as these, then, we can expect no stability, neither do we find it. There is also another fruitful source of desertion which is immediately due to the small amount of pay. A great number of soldiers enlist because the particular trade at which they work is suffering from depression. These men earn, and have earned, good wages, but, suffering from want, have enlisted as a last resource to keep body and soul together. But when the season of trial has passed, they naturally begin to compare their former prosperous state with their present. And, as a result, many of this class desert. Bad non-commissioned officers are another cause of desertion. The old adage about its being impossible to make a silk purse from a sow's ear is very applicable to the present state of the Army. One might almost say that the serjeants make the men; at all events, the influence of their example and power can easily be traced. If they will, they can to a great extent check the ribald language and drinking that goes on in the barrack-room, and, by a judicious exercise of their authority, greatly improve the bearing and character of the men over whom they are placed. But, unfortunately, too generally this authority is much abused. It is no exaggeration of the truth to say that many men are convicted of crimes of which they were not guilty, on the false testimony of some splenetic and revengeful non-commissioned officer; and frequently men are driven to commit offences against military discipline to escape for a time from the tyranny of the serjeant, or other superior who is placed over them, and in the hope that, after their discharge from prison, they will be allowed to change into another company. And if soldiers will court imprisonment to escape from this abused authority, will they not seek refuge from it altogether in flight? There are two other minor inducements to desertion,—granting furlough to men who have been under two full years with the colours; and marrying without leave. A great many cases of desertion arise from the men not returning from their furlough. It would be advisable not to allow any visits to friends or relatives until after two years' service, exceptionally urgent cases to be dealt with according to their merits. Now that the period of enlistment is only seven years with the colours, an enforced separation from home-ties of two years is no very great hardship, and is of great use in accustoming the young soldier to his new mode of life. With regard to a marriage without leave, a private soldier cannot maintain his wife upon his pay, unless she be taken upon the strength of the regiment. As recruits are now taken at an early age, and serve but a few years, it would be no hardship to prevent their marrying at all without leave, which could easily be done by licensing military chapels for marriages, and making it illegal for any minister to marry a soldier but the commissioned chaplains of the Army, or the properly-appointed officiating ministers. It may be urged against this that there would be a great increase of immorality, but I believe the very reverse would result, for in the present state of affairs a soldier enters matrimony with some girl, and leaves her when moved to another station. Any clergyman of a garrison town could speak of the awful results of soldiers marrying without leave. We do not find men deserting from the ranks of either the English or Irish police, and simply because they are men of superior intelligence and character. But in both of these forces the pay is much higher and the period of service is longer, and they have something to look forward to in the future. There is a good deal of competition to get into the Metropolitan Police, whereas recruits for the Army are becoming more difficult to obtain each day. It is contrary to all reason to expect a man who can earn thirty shillings a week to enlist in a service where he receives from between four and six shillings, or, to take a high standard of the full value of a soldier's pay and keep, fifteen shillings. In former days, when they could look forward to employment for 21 years and a pension, many respectable men were induced to enter the ranks; but now-a-days, when they are compelled to retire within a few years, with nothing to look forward to, unfitted by their life as soldiers for any other employment, with six or seven of the best years of their life thrown away in learning a calling no longer useful to them, and with the knowledge that the service is looked down upon as riotous and vicious, there are no inducements for thoughtful or steady men to enter the service of the Queen. Theories may sound very well, and even statistics may appear satisfactory, but facts still remain facts; and this is a stubborn one, that the Army does not hold out sufficient inducements to steady and respectable men. And whilst the ranks are recruited from the present sources, desertion will rather increase than decrease.—I am, &c., S. P. H. S.

NAVAL SCHOOLMASTERS.

SIR,—The case of the Naval Schoolmaster has been brought prominently to notice lately in Parliament. Their Lordships do not see fit to place the Naval schoolmaster on the same footing with his confrère in the Army and Marines as regards pay, position, and pension. It is the pension, however, that he complains most about; and many would, I am sure, gladly serve for a longer period than 20 years, to entitle them to a more liberal scale. It is not from any fault of the Naval schoolmaster that he does not seem to merit the more advanced scale of pay and pension awarded to the Army and Marine schoolmasters. His duties, if carried out, would far exceed those of the sister service. Permit me to enumerate them:—1. Day school for boys. 2. Evening school for men. 3. Harmonium and choir. 4. Charge of ship's library and reading-room. 5. Employment as writer for the commanding officer. The last is not strictly a duty, but the Naval schoolmaster can hardly refuse (more willing than otherwise), and he is in fact more employed in this respect than in any of his official duties. It appears to me that the Naval schoolmaster is under-estimated, because of his little value to the service in a sea-going ship; he is considered to have nothing to do. If, on the other hand, he performed all his duties regularly, he could not be considered, as he often is now, a Q. H. B. I might mention that in attainments the Naval schoolmaster does not lack, many of them having obtained a high pass in navigation and nautical astronomy, besides the cognate subjects of Euclid, algebra, and trigonometry. The three last he has to teach.—I am, &c., N. S.

SIR,—The correspondent, "Paymaster, R.N.," who complained in your last issue of the appointments of Paymasters Ramsay and Parker to very desirable sea-going ships, while they held comfortable home billets, must have been unaware that the last-named officer had for some little time known that the Paymaster of the Alexandra was to be invalided, and thinking it would be a judicious move from Sheerness to the Mediterranean, shortly before his three years expired at the former place, took care to legislate for the fulfilment of his wishes. A "distinguished" officer living "in town" was rather hurt at not hopping into Mr. Parker's shoes, well knowing the latter's intentions. Mr. Ramsay's good-fortune would possibly be officially attributed to his valuable services in the Transport Department during the Ashanti and Cape wars. "Paymaster, R.N.," need not be surprised if he sees a third edition of this generous procedure of his brother officers in relinquishing home for easy-going foreign appointments, and he may be sure that the practice is not likely to "die out" while private influence is a working factor in their distribution. The service and ability of an officer are secondary considerations, in such selections.—I am, &c., WORN QUILL.

SPECTACLES v. BLINDNESS.—"One fourth of those suffering from dimness of sight or blindness can trace their calamity to the use of Spectacles indiscriminately purchased and unsuited to the sight. Mr. H. LAURANCE, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, 39 Old Bond Street, having made the adaptation of spectacles his especial and sole study for upwards of thirty years, personally adapts his improved lenses. Testimonials as to the success of Mr. Laurance's treatment have been received from Earl Lindsay, Sir George Henry Scott Douglas, Bart., Sir Graham Briggs, Bart., Sir Julius Benedict, F. D. ROYAL ARTILLERY.

We understand Col. G. H. Fraser, R.A., has declined the offer made to him of being made a member of the Ordnance Select Committee. Col. Fraser is about to receive a valuable appointment in India.

The 2nd and 3rd Batteries of the 1st Scottish Division R.A., stationed at Sheerness, have received orders to embark for India on Sept. 15. The 2nd Baty. goes to the Murree Hills, and the 3rd to Fort William. Major Price will proceed in command of the latter.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

A rifle-match took place on July 23 between the Halifax Volunteer Artillery and the Royal Engineers, at Bedford, Halifax, N.S., which ended in favour of the latter by 35 points. The scores made at the respective ranges were,—Royal Engineers, 628 points; Volunteers, 593.

The Warrant officers and Non-commissioned officers of the Royal Engineers (Home District) dined together at the Helvetia Hotel, Soho, on July 28. It is easy to conceive the joyous greetings that took place on such an occasion, when so scattered a staff could meet for a few hours to talk about old times and old comrades. Such a gathering has not taken place among this staff for many years. Twenty-four (including the pianist, Mr. Scrivens) sat down to dinner, just before 8 o'clock. Several members were unavoidably absent. The dinner over, Mr. Ross, superintending clerk, War Office (Intelligence Branch), was elected to the chair, and Mr. Andrews, serjt.-major foreman of works, Tower, to the vice-chair. After proposing the health of the Queen and Royal Family, the chairman, in a few but impressive and appropriate words, explained the object of the réunion. After a few toasts and songs, Mr. Taylor, superintending clerk, Commanding Royal Engineer's Office, Horse Guards, who is well known among the subordinate staff, R.E., as the editor of a very useful pamphlet containing a list of all the foremen of works and clerks in the R.E. Department, was called upon, as the originator of the gathering, to make a few suggestions as to the arrangements necessary to enable the staff to assemble periodically, &c. Mr. Taylor dwelt most strongly on the necessity of a strong union among the foremen of works and clerks in a district to enable the various branches of work to be carried on satisfactorily. Several very good songs were sung by Qrmr.-Serjts. Horace Thompson (from Woolwich), Frost, and Coates, and Serjt.-Instructor Johnson (1st Middlesex Engineer Volunteers) and Serjt. Cole, of the last-named corps. Mr. Scrivens, the very able pianist, played selections of Irish airs, opera of "Patience," &c., which added much to the success of the entertainment. It need hardly be said that the Royal Engineers spent (as they always do when they meet) a most enjoyable evening, the only thing regretted was that the time was so short; but all expressed a hearty wish that many more such successful gatherings might take place among the R.E. staff in London. The National Anthem concluded the meeting.

14TH, PRINCE OF WALES'S OWN REGIMENT. The 2nd Batn., at Sealkote, publish a newspaper called Our Journal. The old regimental feeling that can survive the crushing blows it has lately received must be strong indeed. Our Journal appears to have completed its second year.

17TH LEICESTERSHIRE REGIMENT. Lieut. G. J. Younghusband, squadron officer of the Queen's Own Corps of Guides, has been transferred to the Bengal S.C.

30TH REGIMENT. Capt. A. J. A. Wright, station Staff officer at Ranikhet, is appointed to officiate as D.A.Q.M.G.

ROYAL MARINES.

Lieuts. H. Glesson, now R.M.L.I., September 1, 1880; A. H. Cox, now R.M.L.I., September 1, 1880. Probationers, Lieuts. L. C Gordon, September 1, 1881; W. S. Gordon, September 1, 1881; A. Y. Barton, September 1, 1881; A. H. Hire, seniority to be decided hereafter. The under-mentioned probationers who failed to pass at the recent examination at the Royal Naval College, for Royal Marine Artillery, are appointed to the Royal Marine Light Infantry, with seniority of September 1, 1881:—A. E. Marchant, C. L. Gordon, B. H. Lee, E. C. B. Roe, and B. C. Couchman are appointed to the Royal Marine Artillery, subject to their passing satisfactory examinations in naval gunnery and torpedo, with seniority as shown against their respective names.

59TH REGIMENT. This regiment, quartered in Chatham, publishes a paper, called, 5 and 9, Lillywhite's Gazette, a name assumed, doubtless, when white facings were uncommon. The paper seems to be very well conducted. The regiment, like most others, seems determined to retain its old number whenever it can do so.

73RD REGIMENT. The band and pipers of the regiment, assisted by the Cardiff Blue-Ribbon Choir, gave two military concerts on the 11th and 13th inst., at Cardiff, under the patronage of Col. Barnes and the officers of the 41st Regtl. District, for the benefit of the Cardiff Infirmary. Both performances took place in the Eisteddfod Pavilion, and were well patronised, the audiences being really appreciative of the treat provided for them by Col. Barnes in securing the services of the splendid band of his old regiment from Portsmouth. The men, under Mr. Buck's careful conductorship, fully justified the high opinion formed of the band at Henley Regatta this year, where their playing won for him and them golden opinions. The Blue-Ribbon Choir, recent winners at the Crystal Palace competition, were in capital form, Mr. Turpin presiding at the organ and rendering two excellent recitals, while the pipers, under Pipe-Major Stark, late 72nd Highlanders, discoursed music especially sweet to Scotland's sons, of whom the muster, though small, was most enthusiastic, and the impromptu dancing by Piper McKechnie was greatly applauded. General regret is felt that the stay of the band in South Wales is necessarily so brief. Mr. Buck is especially to be congratulated on the result of his labours, a handsome sum being realised for the charitable object in view, and two most enjoyable evenings spent.

The Auxiliary Forces.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

22ND MIDDLESEX (CENTRAL LONDON RANGERS). The head-quarters of this corps, under Lieut.-Col. Alt, proceeds to Aldershot this afternoon for the annual week's training. The Nordenfelt machine-gun battery, belonging to this corps, will, by special permission of H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, accompany the head-quarters, and an elaborate series of experiments will be carried out. It is well known that Gen. Lord Wolseley is greatly in favour of the use of machine-guns in the field, and Lieut.-Col. Alt, commanding the Rangers, has been directed to furnish daily as well as detailed reports of all work done with the guns during the time the corps is in camp. The experiments will consist in determining the extreme effective range of the guns, as also at what distance from the enemy they could be brought into action; whether it is possible to use smokeless powder, the smallest number of men required to work each gun, and all the practical information it is possible to collect regarding the use of machine-guns in the field. The drill, compiled by Capt. R. H. Armit (late Lieutenant, R.N.), who is in command of the guns, will also be thoroughly tested. This will be the first occasion on which machine-guns have been worked in this country in conjunction with troops, and the experiment is being watched with great interest, not only by the members of the Volunteer Force, but also by the military authorities.

2ND VOLUNTEER BATTALION, EAST YORKSHIRE REGIMENT. We observe in the London Gazette of Tuesday last that Major D. M. Inge has been granted the hon. rank of Lieut.-Col. This officer entered the service in July, 1855, and retired by the sale of his commission in Feb. 1870, having served 16 years in the 31st Regt., 8th Hussars, and Inniskilling Dragoons; with these regiment, he served abroad, and wears the medal and clasp for Central India. This, combined with 12 years in the 2nd Volunteer Battalion, East Yorkshire Regt., gives a total of 28 years' service, for which he has now received the hon rank of Lieut.-Col.

THE NATIONAL ARTILLERY MEETING.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The 2nd, or Southern Division of Artillery Volunteers arrived in camp at Shoeburyness last Saturday, and took over the tents vacated on the previous day by the 1st Division. The total number of officers and men was about 1,100. Firing opened on Monday with the 64-pounder R.M.L. Palliser (shell) for four prizes presented by the Secretary of State for War, Lord Londesborough, and the N.A.A., the conditions of the contest being precisely the same as those on Monday of the previous week. The winners were:—

Corps.	Detachment.	Points.	Time.	Deduct.	Total.

Certificates of merit were awarded to No. 7 Detachment 1st Gloucester and No. 4 Detachment 2nd Kent, each of which also made 24 points under time. Compared with the previous week, the present record is very poor, for whereas on Monday of last week the Northern detachments showed one highest possible (48), six scores of 36, two of 18, 15 of 24, and 43 of 12, the Southerners only succeeded in making one 36, 13 scores of 24, one of 18, and 28 of 12 each. As a result of the close of the shell competitions, the West Hartlepool detachment of the 4th Durham win Scotland's International Challenge Cup for 36 points, and No. 13 Detachment 2nd Durham the Cinque Ports Challenge Cup for 43.

On Tuesday the 40-pounder Armstrong contest came off at the Old, New, Seawall, and West Batteries, for prizes value £76, given by the Duke of Cambridge, Mr. E. A. D. Brooshaft, and the Association; four rounds of shot at 1,600 yards. The first prize was won by No. 3 Detachment 3rd Kent (Royal Arsenal), with a score of 42 points, in 5 min. 54 sec.; the second by No. 7 Detachment 2nd Middlesex (Customs), 36 points, 4 min. 30 sec.; the third by No. 1 Detachment 1st Cinque Ports, 36 points, 5 min. 47 sec.; and the fourth by No. 1 Detachment 1st Essex, 33 points, 5 min. 30 sec. Besides the winning scores given above, there were five of 30, two of 27, seven of 24, two of 21, 14 of 18, one of 15, 14 of 12, and 13 of 6, 39 detachments failing to find the target. A favourable feature of the contest was that only 16 detachments exceeded the time, but the general results, as in the 64-pounder, are considerably below those of the Northern Division.

Wednesday's programme was eventful, embracing, as it did, the 40-pounder Armstrong contest at 2,000 yards, the 10-in. 18-ton gun contest among selected brigade detachments, and the repository shift, on the "go-as-you-please" method of mounting and dismounting a gun, for his Excellency the Governor-General of Canada's prize. The practice with the 40-pounder, notwithstanding the increased range, was much better than on the previous day, the first three prizes being taken for three direct hits by each of the winning detachments. No. 3 Detachment 1st Sussex (Brighton) won the Houses of Lords and Commons prize, nine silver cups, value £45, 36 points, in the excellent time of 4 min. 38 sec.; No. 1 Detachment 2nd Devon, the N.A.A. prize of £20, 36 points, 5 min. 30½ sec.; No. 1 Detachment 2nd Middlesex (Customs), the N.A.A. prize of £15, 36 points, 6 min. 6½ sec.; and No. 2 Detachment 3rd Middlesex, Gen. the Earl of Longford's prize of £10 10s., 33 points, 4 min. 29½ sec. A certificate of merit was awarded to the 1st Hants (Portsmouth) also for a score of 33, in 5 min. 1 sec. On the conclusion of this contest, it was found that the highest aggregate scorers in the meeting were No. 7 detachment 2nd Middlesex (Customs), Serjt. Greaves No. 1, their total points in the three contests, one with the 64-pounder and two with the Armstrong, being 86 points. There were no other detachments near them, and of course they take the most coveted prize of the meeting, the Queen's Prize, nine silver cups value £100, and the badges of the Association. The Prince of Wales's cup, to No. 1, and eight others for the other members of the next winning detachment, were awarded to No. 7, 1st Gloucester (Bristol), 69 points; the third prize, Lord Waveney's, a model of a Cadiz mortar, with £10 by the 3rd Middlesex A.V. and £5 added by Lieut.-Col. Ray, was won by No. 1 detachment, 1st Essex (Stratford), 67 points; and the fourth prize by No. 1 Detachment 1st Sussex, 67 points. The competition with the 10-in. 18-ton gun opened in the afternoon, and, like the 40-pounder in the morning, was productive of some fine practice, three prizes being taken with the highest possible. Three rounds were fired at a 9-ft. square target at 1,400 yards, and eight minutes were allowed. The winners were as follows:—Corporation of London and City Company's Challenge Cup and £38, 1st Gloucester, 36 points, 5 min. 23½ sec.; N. A. A. prize, £19, 2nd Kent (Plumstead), 36 points, 6 min. 6½ sec.; N. A. A. prize, £9 10s., 1st Gloucester, 36 points, 7 min. 22¾ sec. In the evening, the repository contest (Canadian) came off in the marshes, in the presence of Col. Fox-Strangways and other officers of the Royals, and a large assemblage of spectators. Six detachments entered, and, as was anticipated, the result practically lay between the 3rd Kent (Woolwich Arsenal), who possess a fine No. 1 in Serjt.-Major Horne, and the Canadians, the latter possessing the services of Serjt.-Major Lyndon. The 1st Essex were the first to go in, but took nearly 22 min. to get through the work, a time which was exceeded by the 1st Glamorgan. The 2nd Kent did the shift smartly and well in 10 min. 25 sec., being specially commended by Col. Fox-Strangways; and the 3rd Kent, at the close of the excellent time of 5 min. 58 sec., gained for their performance well-deserved cheers, the colonel subsequently congratulating Serjt.-Major Horne on the result, which he said was very fine indeed. The Customs Artillery followed, Serjt.-Major Yorke and his men, who displayed fine drill, finishing in 7 min. 50 sec. They were succeeded by the Brighton detachment, who, but for a hitch, would have done better; their time was 12 min. 31 sec. The Canadian team came last, and not only astonished every one who witnessed their work, but also themselves, their No. 1 stating subsequently that in practice they had on no occasion got through the shift in so short a time. Well together from the beginning, they appeared to treat the ponderous 64-pounder as if it were a light field-piece. The work of dismounting down the rear occupied only a minute, and right away with the gun on rollers over the two platforms, they had her up and in position on the other carriage in 4 min. 35 sec. Nothing like this had ever been seen at Shoeburyness, and cheer succeeded cheer at the finish, the Canadians being warmly congratulated by all, and especially Col. Fox-Strangways, who said it was a splendid piece of work On Wednesday, also, the results of the Repository contest, Shift B, details of which have already been published, were announced. Nos. 10 and 11 Detachments 2nd Middlesex (Customs) won the first prize, with 172 marks; and Nos. 2 and 4 1st Essex and Nos. 1 and 3 2nd Kent tied for second place, with 171 marks each. Certificates are awarded to Nos. 1 and 3 1st Essex, 164; and Nos. 2 and 3 3rd Middlesex, 141. The Customs Detachment are also the winners of the Repository badges, and the 1st Essex take the Harcourt Challenge Cup, value 100 guineas, and badges, for making the highest aggregate number of marks during the meeting in the shooting and repository competitions combined. A condition of the latter contest was that each member of the winning detachment should receive from the Camp-Commandant a "certificate for good and soldierlike behaviour during his stay in camp."

The prizes awarded by the National Artillery Association to the Royal Artillery for the best practice with the 10-inch gun have been won as under:—The Western Detachment won the first prize; the School of Gunnery took second honours; and a third prize was made for the Royal Marine Artillery, who had the third best score. The prize was a £5 cup, given by Col. Howard, of the 1st Essex. The Harcourt Challenge Cup was won by the 1st Essex, and the Repository Competition by the 2nd Middlesex. In the afternoon the men were reviewed by Col. Fox-Strangways, R.A., who afterwards complimented them upon the discipline they had maintained during the week they had been in camp and on their proficiency in drill. The prizes won during the meeting were then distributed by Field-Marshal Lord Strathnairn, who, with the Marquis of Londonderry, spoke highly of the general efficiency of the Artillery Volunteers.

At 6 o'clock yesterday morning, the camp, which during the last fortnight has been in the hands of the Volunteers, was taken over by the Royal Artillery, who at once mounted guard while the Volunteers prepared themselves for the route. After breakfast, the camp was invaded by large waggons, which went away laden with the baggage of the men, who at a quarter to 9 were paraded in full marching order and formed three sides of a square. Col. Lewes, the camp commandant, then came on the ground, and, addressing the troops, hoped to meet them in increased numbers year after year. At the close of the speech, the division was formed into column, and at a quarter-past 9 the band of the Glamorgan Artillery Volunteers struck up their national air, "The March of the Men of Harlech," and led the way out of the camp. All the Volunteers appeared to be in excellent condition, and quite ready for the dusty march to Southend, where they were to take train for their various destinations. There were a few cases of loose conduct on Thursday night, but, on the whole, the men have behaved with exemplary rectitude. The Canadian team did not march out with the Southern Division, but left some time afterwards in cabs.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 18, 1883.

IT has been affirmed by the highest military authority that so popular is the British service, that it could be supplied with efficient officers for "absolutely nothing." In the face of this statement, of course, it would be absurd for officers to expect an increase of pay; nay, more, the assertion seems to be, to a great extent, borne out by facts, inasmuch as the money of Purchase Officers, at present in the hands of a most grateful country, goes a long way towards paying the meagre yearly salary of subordinate officers. Let us take the pay of a non-Purchase Captain of the Line. It is 11s. 7d. a day; yearly, it amounts to £211 7s. 11d.; every fourth year, of course, it is 11s. 7d. more. Now, from this we must deduct the following stoppages and subscriptions, which may be considered a very fair representation of what in most regiments has to be subscribed:—Band and mess, per annum, £11 11s. 8d.; regimental contingencies, papers, &c., £7; extra subscription to band, £4 4s.; mess guests (say, yearly), £15; total, £37 15s. 8d; leaving a captain the gross annual income of £173 12s. 3d., wherewith to feed, clothe, and equip himself. In the case of Purchase Captains having, say, £2,000 invested in their commissions, their actual pay from the State is £173 12s. 3d., minus the interest on £2,000, i.e., £73 12s. 3d. In their case, it may be confidently asserted, taking compound interest since abolition of Purchase into consideration, that the Army is supplied with officers of this rank for absolutely nothing. Now let us turn to the consideration of the pay and emolument of the British Subalterns, a stage of existence through which every aspirant to the higher grades has, of course, to pass. His average pay is 6s. 6d. a day; annually, £118 16s., minus deductions, viz., mess guests, £15; mess subscription, eight days, £2 12s. (annually); regimental subscription, papers, light, &c., £7; regimental subscription to band, £4 4s. (contrary to regulation); total, £28 16s. Balance, £90 per annum clear for clothing, equipment, and messing. We take no account of the charges on appointment, exchange, or primary incidental expenses, such as carrying the colours, drill serjeant, first guard, &c. Now, suppose a subaltern pays his tailor £30 a year, no very exorbitant sum, when one considers the changes in dress which take place annually, the British subaltern has £60 a year to support himself on, a good deal less than parents of ordinary means pay for their son's education at a decent school. These are facts which speak for themselves, and go some way towards proving that the British regimental officer, if he is an idle good-for-nothing, has at least this argument—he is not overpaid, for he has to support himself and keep up a position on an amount of remuneration which any skilled mechanic would despise. "The labourer is worthy of his hire," we are told. If, therefore, cases have arisen in which men have been found to take little interest in their work, we must not lose sight of the fact that the pay they draw is not such as to act as an encouragement to them to do more than they can help. That they do work, and work zealously and disinterestedly, is beyond dispute; but the fact of their doing so redounds greatly to their credit, for the figures we have given are sufficient to prove to the strongest enemy of armies that the country does little on its part to make them regard the service as a profession, though Members of Parliament have been arguing of late years that the time has arrived for the introduction of important changes in the direction of increased work and less play.

The caprices of charity in this Island are passing strange. The most terrible calamity of the century has not touched a chord of sympathy in England. All Europe has joined in a chorus of sorrow and poured out a stream of gold on the sufferers from the earthquake, but we who have subscribed so liberally for the Icelanders on short commons and have filled the lists of collections for afflicted communities all over the world do not care at all, apparently, for the survivors of the calamity at Ischia which has caused much wide-spread desolation and misery, for we cannot consider the tardy meetings and the scant subscription lists at all adequate to the occasion. True, the Prince of Wales was early in the field, ever ready in the cause of charity; but in Germany, in Italy, and all over Europe great and generous efforts were at once made by crowned heads and princes to arouse the public to give their money. It is better late than never, and we wish every success to the Lord Mayor's Fund, and to the appeals of the Italian Ambassador. [We shall be happy to receive and forward subscriptions to Messrs. Turner, of Naples, and to acknowledge the names and amounts, for the sufferers at Ischia.—Ed. A. & N. G.]

A grand Military tournament, under the patronage of the Duke of Connaught, will be held on or about Wednesday, August 29, in Bagshot Park. Captain Tully is aiding in the promotion of this tournament.

The Earl of Milltown asked, on Monday last, whether the Government would reconsider the policy of practically repealing the Contagious Diseases Act, which Act, from the evidence given before a Select Committee of the House of Lords, had been proved to be doing a large amount of good work. In reply, the Earl of Northbrook stated that, after the vote of the House of Commons, the Government had taken the only course open to them. It is greatly to be regretted that the well-known opinions of the First Lord of the Admiralty on this subject are not, in the interests of both services, accorded the consideration they deserve. We are sure that no one charged with the administration of the Navy could be more desirous of promoting the welfare and general good of its personnel than his Lordship, and the officers employed in it deplore that his good intentions should be frustrated by hysterical legislation, arising from ignorance and false sentiment. In 1861, a Committee, composed of General Eyre (an officer ever zealous for the good of the service), General Lawrence, the Chaplain-General (Gleig), General Douglas, General Lefroy, Major Buckley, Captain Douglas Galton, and Dr. Sutherland, to whom were referred certain questions connected with the establishment of day-rooms for soldiers by Lord Herbert, drew up a report, in which there is this striking paragraph:—"The Committee cannot conclude this Report without alluding to the monster vice of large garrison towns and military stations, namely, prostitution, and prostitution unmitigated by any precautionary remedial or sanitary arrangements whatsoever. It does not enter into the scope of their instructions to consider how this evil may be kept in check, or what police arrangements seem to them to be practicable under the actual conditions of English legislation; but they beg to call the attention of the Secretary of State to the subject, in the earnest hope that by the better supervision of licensed houses of entertainment, or by arming military police with larger powers, the evil may be mitigated." The precautionary remedies and sanitary arrangements which were subsequently devised and worked so well have just been, with criminal levity, utterly nullified by a small majority of the House of Commons, and rendered inoperative by the special providence of the Queen's Government.

A statistician who advertises for "grievances in the Army, Navy," &c., to be made known to him, will hear of a few, if the friends we wot of catch sight of the demand. If he is short, we can supply him with a few from our Reserve.

The only body now in Spain which can make a movement to overthrow a Government is the army. The old partisan chiefs, leaders of guerrilla, the Cabecilla, who figured in the insurrectionary outbreaks to which the Peninsula is not a stranger, have died out or retired into private life, and the sole materials for combustion of constitutions at hand are the ardent young soldiers, commissioned or otherwise, who are ready for a row, either on political or personal grounds. It is not creditable to Senhor Ruiz Zorilla, if he really has prepared the pronunciamiento which was so great a fiasco, from his safe retreat in France, that he should not have headed it with the courage of his convictions, instead of leaving his victims to death or exile.

The Daily News' correspondent at Pietermaritzburg has made Cetewayo perpetrate a very neat bull, and he took the trouble to send it by cable all the way to London. "Cetewayo said to Mr. Osborne that he could not speak now, being a dead man." How did he say it?

Of course, the elected Members of the Natal Legislature have disapproved of the proposed return of the chief with the long name, "Langalibalele." His presence would be a standing rebuke to them.

Although Lieutenant-Colonel Walsh, R.M.L.I., commenced his duties as Assistant-Adjutant-General in London on the 9th inst., his vacancy on the Lieutenant-Colonels' List has not yet been filled by the promotion of the senior Major, and of others that would follow in succession. It is rumoured that there will also shortly be another vacancy on the Lieutenant-Colonels' List, by the voluntary retirement of Lieutenant and Brevet Colonel Nurse, who is at present on leave of absence from his head-quarters.

A correspondent, whose opinions are entitled to much consideration, in a lengthy letter respecting a subject we mentioned in a short paragraph last week, contends "that a regiment—i.e., the officers of a regiment—not being a corporation or corporate body, cannot make over the regimental mess-plate to trustees, to protect it from the action of the military authorities, or for any other purpose whatever." He maintains that the officers are in effect themselves trustees. "Delegatus non delegari potest" is a maxim of law which our correspondent quotes ad hoc. "The body of officers of a corps hold the plate for an abstraction called the mess. The mess is composed of individuals who are perhaps only temporarily appointed to that corps. These individuals are liable to be transferred to another battalion or regiment. They from time to time receive additions to their body, or have members of the mess removed or promoted out of it. But the mess-plate is held in trust by the officers for the time being, as quasi-trustees for the abstraction called the regiment. The plate consists partly of articles presented by men dead and gone, by men who have left the regiment or the Army, by men who have joined other regiments, and partly of articles purchased by the money of those who are and who were officers of the regiment, with the common object of decorating the table of the corps to which they are proud to have belonged, and to which they wish to give proofs of their attachment. No authorities whatever have any right, even with the consent of the present body of officers, to assume the rights of ownership or to exercise any control over the mess-plate. Colonel Jones, when he was in the Yellows, gave a piece of plate worth £100, as a κτημα εις αιει, which he intended to decorate their mess-table. General Jones left the regiment long ago, but no "authority" in or out of Pall Mall can order that his epergne or salver shall be appropriated by the Greens. An Act of Parliament, such as that which dealt with the trusts of founders of scholarships, &c., in the Universities, might empower the War Office to deal with the mess-plate; but without such a power, the Colonel and 'his officers may keep their plate to themselves, though they cannot place it in trust." So far, our correspondent, who is not the learned Smellfungus, but a lawyer of renown, albeit once a soldier. He thinks that it was not wise to make the move which has called attention to the subject.

The following telegram has been received by the Secretary of State for War from the General Officer Commanding in Egypt:—"August 17. 30186 Gunner Frank Beck, 5th Battery, I Brigade, Scottish Division, R.A., patient in Ramleh Hospital with dysentery, died to-day of cholera. No other deaths from cholera. Reports generally satisfactory."

We cannot understand the anxiety that is manifested to create a difficulty over the subsidy paid to Abdurrahman Khan. However, we admit Mr. Cross has a magnificent conception of what constitutes "arms and ammunition," for he thought 1,500 rifles, 1,000 carbines, and shells, cartridges, shot, &c., to follow, were trifles of no account, if not light as air. Perhaps, they are of the wooden nutmeg kind, but the Afghans are, in that case, likely to be difficult to manage, if they rise against our ally and subsidized friend on the Musnud of Cabul.

1883. Queen's Regulations, Section xvii., paragraph 1:—"The period of the year at which it is desirable that troops from England should reach" North America is "from April to June," or "from October to November," i.e., after the English winter, to reach North America before the heat of summer; or after the English summer, to reach North America before the great cold of winter. We hear, however, that after a Bermudian summer, which is very hot, the 86th are to come to North America, to encounter the biting cold of Halifax, to replace the 101st, who go to England. Would it not have been more in accordance with hygienic notions to have brought the Irish Rifles from Bermuda in the spring, and thus permit of their being let down gently to the cold weather of a North-American winter? This would have agreed with the regulation that troops from England should arrive at Bermuda in March, and would have been no harm to the regiment at Halifax going home in the spring. The Regulations seem sensibly devised, but why are not those Regulations carried out? As matters stand, the old 86th, after being stewed at Bermuda, are to be frozen at Halifax. Poor old "County Downs!"

Deputy-Surgeon General A. H. Fraser has been appointed Principal Medical Officer in Ireland, in succession to Surgeon-General Sinclair, who goes to Malta as Principal Medical Officer, in place of Surgeon-General Franklyn.

The boldest act of the brigands of which we have heard for some time is the seizure by them of the Governor of Salonica, in the town itself, after a fight with his guards, in which two of the latter were killed. Salonica is a walled town, with a garrison; a British Consul-General (Mr. Blunt) resides there, and it is a place of great importance, with considerable shipping interests, which are watched over by a covey of Consuls of all nationalities. Some time ago the brigands created a sensation by carrying off Colonel Synge, but that was at some distance from the town. Here they absolutely entered the walled city and tore the Pasha away from the midst of his guards. These ruffians are all of Greek nationality, and excellent Christians.

The Marquis of Hartington is reported to have said at the Mansion House that there was far from being any difficulty with regard to recruiting at this moment. It would be interesting to know how the Secretary of State for War can reconcile this statement with the fact that the Royal Regiment of Artillery is between 1,800 and 1,900 men under its establishment, a greater number than has existed for many years past.

In another column we publish a report of a meeting of the British Medical Association, at which Surgeon-Major Evatt, Army Medical Department, strongly urged the formation of several entire battalions of the Auxiliary Forces, as well as Regular troops, to be trained solely for the removal and care of sick and wounded soldiers. Dr. Evatt's proposals appear to be singularly ill-timed. The Army in all its branches is below its establishment to an extent that is causing general alarm. The standard of height has been reduced, and is not to be rigidly adhered to; the limitation as to age, or rather youth, has been practically removed, for by accepting "the physical equivalent of 18," the door has been thrown open to evasion; and the recruiting nets have been altered so that their meshes may catch very queer little fishes indeed. In this extremity, optional long service has been reverted to, but this also seems to be a failure. Army reforms have almost destroyed the old regimental attachments, have impaired discipline, and have made the service so unpopular, that offers of bounty and other advantages, which used to be irresistible, are declined. At a time when all branches of the Army at home and abroad are alarmingly depleted, and when the influx of stunted and immature lads does not supply the increasing "leakage" at all points, Dr. Evatt asks for a little army of medical attendants. He urges also the extension to the Volunteer Force of that system of "unification" which has given general dissatisfaction in the Regular Army. With recruits of short stature and imperfect development, we may expect a large proportion of sick, if unfortunately they should be subjected to the strain of even a short campaign. Our most pressing want at present is—men for soldiers—not whole battalions of hospital attendants,

THE LATE CHIEF INSPECTOR OF LIFEBOATS.

Sir,—A couple of lines in your last issue briefly dismisses an officer's name whose unparalleled services to the maritime community would, I feel sure, meet a more meritorious notice if the name of Admiral J. R. Ward was brought under your attention. The late Admiral Algernon, Duke of Northumberland, K.G., through the late Admiral Washington, introduced Com. Ward to the National Lifeboat Institution in 1852. You are aware of the Duke having got up a committee upon the lifeboat subject, upon which great ignorance prevailed, and the famous Northumberland Report was printed. At that time, 1852, when Com. Ward joined the Committee of the National Lifeboat Institution, and was made its first general inspector of lifeboats, the society had not one of its own (it has now 273 stationed), under its own management, but nominally it had connected with it 14 "life" boats. In that year Com. Ward tested, at great personal risk, the first self-righting lifeboats. In heavy seas, some frightful and fatal accidents took place from the obstinacy of certain parties, and nearly every improvement has since emanated from Admiral Ward's experience. The whole of the stations of the Institution were selected under the care and special enquiry of Com. Ward,—there are nearly 270 of the National Lifeboat Institution. He also improved the very important, costly, and but too heavy, scientifically-built transporting carriage constructed by Government for the Institution, and they are by the test of time proved to be in every way adapted to the severe work required from them in the plunging seas, and the use of which he reduced to a minimum of danger in the dark stormy nights on our shores. Again, the improvements in the fittings of the lifeboats in most valuable ways, the building and adaptation of the lifeboats for varied service, and the immense value of the life-belts that he designed and adopted, has been proved by the less loss of life that has occurred in the most arduous and dangerous work upon record. Since Admiral Ward has been in the service of the National Lifeboat Institution, there have been upwards of 20,000 lives saved in its lifeboats, vessels, and system, that has become the admiration of the world. He has supervised the building of these boats, assisted only by one under-assistant, Mr. Prowse, who formerly belonged to Woolwich Dockyard. After many years, being the only lifeboat inspector, he had appointed under him the present Retired Admiral Robertson Macdonald, who, for about 16 years, aided him well in carrying on the work, but the liberality of the public, and the demands for more stations, from the popularity of the noble services of our coast-men, made an increase of staff necessary, and other officers of the Royal Navy have been at various times taken on to the Institution's establishment, and Admiral Ward has given them all the utmost advantage of his long and quite unequalled experience of 31 years. It has been during Admiral Ward's time that the Queen has given her annual subscription. The Prince of Wales, the vice-patron, has now been joined in that by the Duke of Edinburgh, and last month the Princess of Wales sent a very handsome donation, signifying her Royal Highness's desire to become associated with such a grand national cause as the Institution has created. The Royal Family does not lightly patronise without full inquiry! At the last annual meeting in March, the Institution was declared as perfect as money and human talent can make it, and now Admiral Ward declares that, being 70 years old, he desires to retire, so that younger men may take his place (but he remains a member of committee), and the Duke of Northumberland, the President, in the chair, the committee voted to Admiral Ward its highest honour, the gold medal, and the testimony on vellum of his long and glorious service (he had already won the silver medal for gallant service in lifeboat work). Foreign nations have long ago sent him medals, and honourable recognition of his noble work. In thus drawing your notice to Admiral Ward, I hope not to let so gallant an officer fall into the obscurity of retirement without the Royal Navy being able to pay a tribute to one so worthy of the glorious traditions of Nelson, who loved those captains most who saved imperilled life. Let me say, I have been for 30 years, up to March last serving as chairman of the Institution and sub-committees, and its whole work and rewards have been under my hands unintermittingly, but I have admired Admiral Ward officially, not knowing him as a private friend.—I am, &c.,

Edward Perrott, Bart.

SCOTCH HARBOURS OF REFUGE.

Sir,—In your last Saturday's account of the cruise of the Reserve Squadron you say, Peterhead is the place most favoured by Nature for the purpose of a harbour of refuge for the west of Scotland; that a breakwater could be easily built enclosing a spacious harbour suitable for men-of-war and also for coasters, and that there is no other place on the coast, to your knowledge, suitable for the purpose, unless it be Lunan Bay, to the northward of Red Head. Permit me to suggest that Aberdeen Bay is a more suitable situation for the proposed harbour than Peterhead. My reasons are,—1st. When a ship finds herself embayed with an on-shore gale between the Firth of Tay and the Moray Firth, she will find Aberdeen more equidistant between the two Firths and more to leeward than Peterhead. 2nd. If a ship can haul off the land and keep the sea from the vicinity of Aberdeen to Buchan Ness or Peterhead, she can equally well weather Rattray Briggs, and then keep away for Kinnaird Head and the Moray Firth, with Cromarty under her lee. 3rd. The depth of water in Aberdeen Bay from Girdle Ness northwards is from five to six fathoms, against 12 fathoms in Peterhead Bay; consequently, a breakwater could be constructed at much less cost and in a much shorter time at the former place; it would also be a great protection to the large amount of shipping frequenting the port. 4th. The area of a harbour of refuge at Peterhead must necessarily be contracted, owing to the formation of the adjoining land, while the rocky nature of the bottom for some distance from the shore would still further contract the available anchorage. At Aberdeen, a large area of good holding-ground, say from Girdle Ness to the entrance of the River Don, could be enclosed at a relatively small cost. Although I advocate Aberdeen Bay as being the most suitable place for the construction of a breakwater capable of affording shelter to ships of large tonnage, I would, nevertheless, consider it very advisable, in the interests of the coasters and fishing vessels incapable of keeping the sea, to throw up a breakwater at Peterhead, from Buchan Ness to the Skerries, and a little beyond them in the direction of Salthouse Point; this would convert Invernethy Bay into a small but safe harbour.—I am, &c., R. Assheton Napier, Lieut. R.N.R.

NAVAL NOTES.

It is intended to fit all sea-going battle-ships, whether masted or mastless, with nets composed of wire rope for torpedo defence. These nets will protect only the central compartments of the ship, including the magazines, it being understood that nets for the protection of the bows and stern of a vessel may be extemporised, when necessary. When ships are on a station, this gear is not to be kept on board, but in the stores on shore.

Instructions were received at Sheerness from the Admiralty on Saturday, directing the repair of the Salamis to be suspended, the officials being of opinion that she is unfit for further service. Another vessel will, therefore, have to be provided to relieve the Vigilant on the China station.

The Mistletoe, gunboat, one of the three vessels of similar build, and of a larger and much improved description, which have been constructed for the Government by Messrs. Laird Brothers, of Birkenhead, was taken outside the Plymouth Breakwater for a six hours' full-speed contractors' trial on Tuesday, and it was regarded in every respect as satisfactory. In the last hour, 726-horse power was indicated, although the engines were contracted to develop 600. During the time of the trial stormy weather prevailed, and the sea-going capabilities of the ship were fully tested.

The Sultan, alongside Portsmouth Dockyard, having completed her refit, bent sails on Thursday. The Polyphemus, Jumna, and Assistance are in dock; also the Victoria and Albert. The timbers of the Royal yacht are found to be in a very rotten condition, and it is by no means certain that the whole of her planking will not have to be renewed. Much valuable time has been wasted by the undue deference paid to the wishes of Messrs. Labouchere and Co., and it appears extremely doubtful whether the repairs will be completed by next summer. On Thursday the stem of the Camperdown—a solid forging, weighing, with the projecting ram, some six or seven tons—was placed in position, the stem-head, according to a time-honoured custom, being decked with evergreens. The mould for the stern-post is also in position. The Camperdown is perhaps the last ironclad that will have a wrought-iron stem; cast steel will in all probability be substituted in future. The Impérieuse has nearly all the plating on her barbette towers, and a considerable amount of the wood sheathing on her bottom. A novel feature in this vessel is that the whole of her small allowance of side armour—40 ft. on the water-line—will be covered by the wood sheathing. The Bacchante, in the large basin, is being dismantled, and the troopships are nearly ready for service, the Malabar being alongside the south jetty. The Warrior is still waiting for her new masts.

During the height of the gale on Tuesday night, near Cork harbour, the Neptune dragged her moorings and drifted towards the Agincourt. The vessels touched, but a serious collision was averted. The Neptune, having slipped, proceeded to Monkstown Bay, where she anchored in safety. This is somewhat more seamanlike than the manner in which two German ironclads were recently handled under similar circumstances, when both were so seriously damaged as to necessitate an expensive refit.

VOLUNTEER MEDICAL ORGANISATION.

The British Medical Association held their annual gathering at Liverpool on Wednesday, Aug. 1. A meeting of Volunteer medical officers was held in one of the sectional rooms to hear an address by Surg.-Major Evatt, A.M.D., on "Volunteer Medical Organisation." Surg.-Major Evatt, at the outset of his address, explained the present position of Army medical organisation. The Army Estimates were at present heavy, and there was a growing feeling that they could not very largely exceed their present amount. Our medical service, both in officers and men, was quite too small to deal with a foreign war. He believed it was to the Volunteer organisation they must look for the future development of our military system; and those in the medical service must draw closer and closer to the developed Volunteer medical service. With great possibilities, up to the present the result had not been great, there being no distinct medical corps and no defined unit, either as a bearer company or field hospital, organised. If the Volunteer medical service was to become really efficient, it must stand on its own legs, wear its own uniform, and do its own work. There was ample room in the battalions of Volunteers for the existing Volunteer regimental surgeons, and there was still a great work to be done in carrying out the regimental stretcher-bearers' training. But what was needed was a body of fully 1,000 Volunteer medical staff surgeons, and probably 10,000 Volunteer medical rank and file, the whole body, officers and men, organised into bearer companies and field hospitals by counties and cities, and serving quite free from the regimental organisation as organised units under medical control. Until this was done, it was quite in vain to say the Volunteer Army was efficient. If the medical profession was to claim independence and to demand control, it must fit itself for work, and to do that it needed training and organisation, which must begin in the medical schools, where Volunteer medical corps or companies should be formed; and, in this event, the War Minister would be asked to give the capitation grant, as for combatants. Surg.-Major Evatt concluded his address by a number of suggestions for the furtherance of the object in view. Some discussion followed, and the following resolutions were adopted:—"That the existing condition of the Volunteer Medical Service is unsatisfactory, inasmuch as it consists solely of regimental medical officers; and that the organisation of a regular medical corps of officers and Volunteer rank and file into Volunteer medical battalions and companies is needed, in addition to the existing regimental service; that it is desirable to draw the attention of the War Minister to this state of affairs, and to request that he will initiate such a corps." "That opportunities for training the Volunteer surgeon in ambulance and field-hospital duties should be afforded at Aldershot, Woolwich, or some northern centre." "That, if the Army Medical Department and the Army Hospital Corps be united into a Royal Medical Corps, as recommended by Lord Morley's Commission, the Medical Service now proposed to be organised be designated the 1st, 2nd (and so on) Volunteer Battalion Royal Medical Corps."

THE INSTRUCTION OF GARRISON ARTILLERY.

SIR,—In all learning a good beginning or start, and a foundation to rely on, are most desirable, to ensure a reasonable quickness in acquiring knowledge, with at the same time the faculty of remembering the lessons taught, with a view to further progressing to the complete mastery of the curriculum or course in all its details. In artillery duties and exercises for the garrison artilleryman, this course of instruction is generally termed drill,—a word most inadequate to inform the uninitiated of all that is included under that old-fashioned technical name,—for gunnery is a science, although not an exact one, and therefore the more difficult. Our garrison artillerymen of the present day (siege artillery proper we have none) have much to learn and remember, and in order to remember, rehearsal or bonâ fide re-drilling for all ranks is imperative, if complete efficiency at shortest notice is sought for. Many years ago (from an artillery point of view), Woolwich was the grand depôt for all recruits joining the ordnance branch of the service. The training of the recruit was then continuous until he was fit to join his company in one of the battalions, as the sub-divisions of the regiment were then named. The system worked well, and the garrison artillerymen in the trenches before Sebastopol were not found wanting in physique, or in knowledge of their work. As changes took place in the manufacture of matériel, in the power and variety of ordnance, and in improvements in ammunition, &c., the Royal Regiment of Artillery was from time to time considerably increased, particularly in the garrison branch. This large increase in men for both Field and Garrison Artillery has at last resulted in dividing the regiment for recruiting purposes and individuality into territorial divisions or districts for the Garrison Artillery, with a depôt for each about the strength of a very weak service battery. These depôts take up the recruit at once, clothe, mark, and stamp him, and after an interval of sixty days at most—practically often less—send him to some service battery in his territorial district which may be short of men or below its establishment. Now, what is the result? The recruit, joining imperfectly trained as an infantry man, with little knowledge of discipline, knowing no gunnery (perhaps as yet having never seen a gun), is thrown amongst a number of strangers to pick up what he can,—in fact, he is much in the position of a public school boy, removed from the first or second form to the sixth, and expected to keep up with his companions, aided perhaps by an extra hour or two of coaching, i e., drilling! Failure must be the result, and any exception only proves the rule. No wonder, then, that the young would-be gunner is, at the very outset of his career, disheartened, disgusted; and at best never turns out as good or smart and well set-up as he ought and would do under a more enlightened, methodical, and better devised system of initiatory course of training. Given a case. A service battery in some out-of-the-way fort has just sent a draft of (trained?) gunners abroad. Ten recruits from the depôt are all that can be sent to replace them. The various duties (very likely a permanent boat's crew, garrison and telegraph orderlies, &c.), hard enough before, are more so now, and the recruits cannot assist, except on a Saturday or Sunday, which, of course, allows the recruit no partial holiday. Moreover, the so-called trained duty gunners have no time for drill or rehearsal of drills mastered, and rustiness, slackness, and the feeling of smart drill being a bore, and to be shirked, is too often engendered in the minds of young soldiers, and is fatal alike to efficiency and discipline. What good, then, again we ask, can this imperfect mode of training the recruit effect, particularly if, as often happens, the fort or station has only a few guns of heavy calibre, and few or no appliances or smaller ordnance for the gradual and proper instruction, training, or drilling the recruit in all the multifarious duties a garrison artilleryman is expected to be conversant with, in order that he can be recorded in the estimates for pay as a skilled gunner? Naturally, under the conditions stated (and they are not exaggerated), his instruction must be scamped, and no blame can be justly awarded to any one, or thing, except to that existing impersonal regulation system, which so easily passes on responsibility to, it may be, some unfortunate major or commanding officer who has been unlucky enough to be in possession of many of this class of recruit on the establishment of his battery. Even at last, when in sheer despair, they are returned as duty men, recruits they virtually still are, and will remain so most likely to the end of the chapter, as regards soldierlike training, discipline, and artillery drills and exercises. History relates that the once-powerful Egyptian nation required a subject nation or people to render a complete tale of bricks, but supplied no straw for their manufacture. Let us take heed, and supply the necessary straw to fabricate our garrison artillerymen in the shape or a form of method the reverse of the existing substitute for one. The method that suggests itself to the observant and practical gunner is simple, viz., to train and drill the recruit at his depôt, and whilst there to imbue him with a love for and interest in the service, so that when he joins his battery he will have some status in it, and fit for duty, and more able to perfect and improve his knowledge of artillery duties. To effectively carry out the idea the depôts should be increased, and at intervals squads of men from the service batteries at home should rejoin the depôt for re-drilling for a short period, easily done, as they would replace the recruits or rather fairly trained young soldiers leaving for their respective batteries. With some such system in operation, the territorial recruit would re-visit his military birthplace again, once, if not oftener in his service, and thereby a great step be made to foster and promote what is so desired, a territorial esprit de corps, and great assistance to recruiting would doubtless follow. As a matter of course, these depôts would have to be provided with an outfit of artillery appliances in various guns, simple machines, &c., with full-size working models of the guns of large calibre, the details, however, are not necessary to particularise. Nor is it necessary more than to hint, how the auxiliary artillery might aid and work into and with the proposed scheme. Practice ranges, sea and land, are convenient to most of the existing depôt stations, and the possibilities for siege artillery operation, instruction would be by no means difficult to attain. Why are our Marine Artillery so efficient? Simply and solely from their excellent and workmanlike method of primary training, backed up by re-drilling for all ranks without exception. In conclusion, all young officers should join and learn drill, and the supervision and instruction of men, at their respective depôts. Again, re-drill by forming classes for long and short courses on the School of Gunnery plan. The officers, from captain to subaltern, with a class for non-commissioned officers, all to be taken from the batteries belonging to or attached to the Territorial Division for Garrison Artillery. And in connection with the whole question of artillery efficiency, it is suggested that the strength or establishment of a garrison battery should not be less than 150 gunners, with three subalterns (restoring the one taken away), and so allowing one officer to 50 men, a proper working division; the captain to be drill supervisor and instructor, and in other ways assisting the major as an adjutant, and so defining his duties, which at present are left to fancy and chance. The strength of a chain depends on each individual link. May one important link—the Garrison Artillery—be always found strong, well made, and without flaw, in the chain of England's defences.—I am, &c., GUNNER.

At what age should a boy go to sea? This question was (says Mr. Sala, in the Illustrated London News) raised the other day in the House of Commons by Sir J. Hay, who, in the debate on the Naval Estimates, maintained that "in these days of steam, there was nothing that boys could learn on board a hulk which they could not learn better on land. The best Naval officer whom he had ever known—the late Lord Dundonald—did not take the sea till he was 18. It was much better that youths should have a good education before they entered on their profession. Boys took the sea just as well at 16 or 17 as 13." His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh "took the sea" at 14, as a Naval cadet on board the Euryalus. On reference to Campbell's "Lives of the Admirals," I find that most of our great Naval heroes, Howe, Bridport (Hood), St. Vincent (Jervis), Boscawen, and Collingwood, took the sea either at 13 or 14. Mr. Sala quotes Southey's "Life of Nelson," to show that the hero of Trafalgar went to sea at 12.—Kentish Fire.

CRIMEAN MEMORIAL CHURCH CONSTANTINOPLE.

Most Englishmen are probably aware that after the close of the Russian War in 1856, a Church was built at Constantinople by public subscription, in memory both of the great struggle in which our nation had been engaged, and of the many Christians, our countrymen, who had lost their lives in its cause. At a public meeting held in London, April 28, 1856, H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge in the chair, it was resolved "That the most suitable memorial would be an edifice in which Almighty God might, from generation to generation, be worshipped according to the rites and usages of the Church of England, and that such a Memorial Church be erected at Constantinople." The Church was built, and vested in the SOCIETY for the PROPAGATION of the GOSPEL in FOREIGN PARTS, who in 1856 sent to Constantinople the Rev. C. G. Curtis, M.A., who has acted as Chaplain up to the present time. The cost of erecting a handsome church in a place so peculiarly situated as Constantinople was necessarily great, and no endowment could be provided even for needful repairs.

An APPEAL is therefore now made to the English nation, and especially to those two great services, the Army and the Navy, to assist in providing a capital sum of not less than £5,000, to be vested in the Incorporated Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, the interest to be applied to the maintenance in suitable repair of the fabric of this great National Memorial. This appeal has received the cordial support of H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief and the Right Rev. the Chaplain-General.

Donations and Subscriptions will be received by the TREASURERS of the SOCIETY for the PROPAGATION of the GOSPEL in FOREIGN PARTS, 19 Delahay Street, S.W. Cheques should be crossed "Drummond's."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, Esq.,
Bloomsbury, London.

Dear Sir,—We embrace this opportunity of congratulating you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine, Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne, has earned for itself, not only in Hindostan, but all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported into the country, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.
Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff), discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of

COUGHS, ASTHMA, COLDS,
BRONCHITIS,
EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—In general debility, nervous excitation, and mental depression, these unrivalled Pills have a marvellous effect. They have won the confidence of millions in all parts of the civilised world. Constitutions shaken by sensual excesses, by long residence in unwholesome climates, by sedentary habits, overwork, worry, or anxiety, are wonderfully renovated by a course of this extraordinary medicine, which, powerful as is its action on the whole system, is perfectly harmless to the tenderest frame. The Pills are composed of rare and carefully selected balsams, without the admixture of any mineral whatever, or other deleterious substance. They operate directly, powerfully, and beneficially upon the whole mass of blood. The most sceptical cannot question the fact when we see indigestion cured, liver complaints arrested, the oppressed lungs brought into healtful play, and every physical function renewed and strengthened by their agency.

Great individual attention is given, as few pupils are taken, and steady work is insisted on. Since the introduction of the Military Competitive, out of Forty-two Lieutenants of Militia sent up, Twenty-six have been successful, several taking high places in the list. There are opportunities for healthy country amusements and games, a cricket and football ground, lawn-tennis courts (grass and asphalte), a private billiard-room, &c., and in all other respects a liberal and gentleman's establishment is kept.

A Large Staff of Experienced Tutors, all resident, assist in preparing for the Qualifying Examinations, and for the Sandhurst and Woolwich Competitions.

EGYPTIAN NOTES.

Alexandria, Aug. 6, 1883.

I am again unable to furnish you with the state of health of the troops in time for the mail. Unfortunately, the absence of news is far from implying good news; up to the day before yesterday the losses from cholera alone were 3 officers and 107 men, or 110 in all; the last two days have brought it close up to 130. The additional officer is Dr. C. Lewis, of the Army Hospital Corps, a young and popular surgeon. The losses among this corps have been very heavy, a feature which is contrary to the experience of the epidemic in India. In Alexandria, two only among the troops have succumbed, the one a staff clerk, who, being ill, came out to Ramleh as the guest of a comrade in the Army Hospital Corps. Shortly after his arrival, he showed symptoms of cholera, and rapidly succumbed. His friend was taken in the hospital next day, and also died. An officer in the Egyptian service, Captain Chamley Turner, formerly of the 53rd (Shropshire), has had a narrow escape. This is one of that class of officers not rare in the Egyptian Army, who, under ordinary circumstances, strike a casual acquaintance as a man with a good deal of energy indeed, but mainly directed to sport, and in this case to the slaughter of pigeons. But in circumstances like the present, we see the British officer at his best. All General Wood's officers have manifested a devotion to the personal comfort of their men which has won the admiration of all, but none more so than Major Turner, who literally gave up days and nights to the not fascinating employment of an Egyptian hospital nurse, with the result that he himself became nearly a victim to the disease, and now, against his will, is imperatively ordered home by Sir Evelyn to recruit his health. The general state of things in Cairo is not calculated to raise the spirits, and the enterprise of those officers, non-commissioned officers, and men who recently gave a very successful little entertainment at the Soldiers' Club deserves to be commended.

Leave of absence in extension has been granted as follows:—Lieutenant and Adjutant McGrigor, King's Royal Rifles, till July 31, 1883; Captain Carden, 2nd Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, till arrival of the steamship Mareotis in Egypt; Lieutenant Lloyd, 2nd Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, till arrival of the steamship Mareotis in Egypt; Captain Brophy, 1st Royal Highlanders, till August 3, 1883; Captain Hewing Cooper, 6-I, R.A., till October 7, 1883; Lieutenant A. G. Duff, Royal Highlanders, till August 4, 1883. On the other hand, the following leaves of absence have been cancelled, and officers will rejoin their corps by August 8:—Staff: Major-General Graham, V.C., K.C.B., and Lieutenant-Colonel Clery, A.A.G.; Lieutenants Donne and Todd-Thornton, Royal Sussex; Major Kidston, Royal Highlanders; Major Disney-Roebuck, Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry; Lieutenant-Colonel Hammill, Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Boyes, Lieutenants Jackson, Henderson, Miller-Wallnutt, and Denne, Gordon Highlanders; Major Miers and Lieutenant Mackenzie, Cameron Highlanders; Surgeon-Major Ramsbotham, Army Medical Department; Lieutenant Thomson, Royal Engineers.

Colonel Sir Cromer Ashburnham, K.C.B., King's Royal Rifle Corps, has returned from leave, and assumed command of the troops at Suez. On arrival of General Graham, the troops at Ismailia and Suez will be formed temporarily into a brigade, under his command, with Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon as Brigade-Major.

The following officers have returned to duty:—Surgeon B. W. Wellings, A.M.D.; Surgeons-Major W. A. Catherwood and W. H. McNamara; Surgeons R. H. Gardner and T. J. Gallwey. The first-named has taken medical charge of Staff and departments from Surgeon Dixon, placed on sick-list.

Surgeon-Major Barnwell has gone from Alexandria to Ismailia on duty. Surgeon-Major M'Geagh has returned to Alexandria on duty. Surgeon-Major Rogers has gone to El Wardan on duty. Surgeon-Major Davies has gone to Helouan on duty. Superintending-Sister Miss Jones and Nursing-Sister Miss Coles have gone to Helouan on duty.

1st-Class Veterinary-Surgeon Boulter takes charge of the 19th Hussars, vice Veterinary-Surgeon Mitchell.

The admittances into hospital for the week show 283 (including eight officers) against 151 discharged.

The deaths for nine days from all causes, 26th ult. to 3rd inst., inclusive, were 78. This out of a total of 6,800 men represents 1·15 per cent.

THE INNISKILLING REGIMENTS.

A small town in the north of Ireland has given more regiments to the British Army than any other town or city in the United Kingdom, except possibly London. In 1688, when the people of Enniskillen (or Inniskilling, for the town has alternately borne these names) determined to fight in the cause of King William, they raised a considerable force of cavalry and infantry. In the latter part of 1688 and during 1689, the Inniskilling corps had several encounters with the Jacobite troops, and soon gained a high reputation for daring and fortitude. In January, 1690, King William fixed the establishment of the Inniskilling regiments as follows:—

A Regiment of Horse, of 12 troops......	714 of all ranks.
Two Regiments of Dragoons, of 8 troops each	1,162 „ „ „
Three Regiments of Foot, of 13 companies each	2,781 „ „ „

The regiment of horse was disbanded in 1697, after the treaty of Ryswick, and, probably for that reason, its services are not separately described, but it may be assumed that it took part in some of the many actions in which "the Inniskilling forces" are mentioned as having fought gallantly. In 1693, one of the dragoon regiments (Colonel James Wynne's) went on foreign service with King William's army, and earned under him its title of Royal Irish Dragoons. It afterwards served throughout Marlborough's campaigns from 1702 to 1712, and was specially distinguished, together with the Scots Greys, at Ramillies. This fine regiment was disbanded in 1799, for supposed complicity in the Irish rebellion. During the rebellion an order was issued to the effect that eligible recruits were to be enlisted by a detachment of the 5th Royal Irish Dragoons. The imprudence of this order was soon evident, because a considerable number, afterwards discovered to be rebels, joined the detachment in order to learn their drill; but there was no evidence of disloyalty implicating the regiment generally. In 1858, by an act of uncommonly tardy justice, the disbandment of 60 years before was cancelled, as far as possible; the long vacant place in the army list was filled; and the 5th Royal Irish Dragoons, cleared from undeserved reproach, re-appeared as the 5th Royal Irish Lancers. Last year, when the names of some of Marlborough's victories were granted, the claim of the 5th Lancers to inherit the names of "Blenheim," "Ramillies," "Oudenarde," and "Malplaquet" was admitted. The other dragoon regiment (Sir Albert Cunningham's) saw much active service during the civil war; it was engaged at Dettingen and Fontenoy; and during "the seven years' war" and the Duke of York's campaigns, it raised still higher the reputation of the 6th Inniskilling Dragoons. The Royal Dragoons, the Greys, and the Inniskillings formed the celebrated "Union Brigade" at Waterloo. When Wynne's Dragoons joined King William's army in 1693, Inniskilling raised another dragoon regiment (Colonel Henry Cunningham's), now the 8th Royal Irish Hussars. This regiment had much hard fighting during the "war of the succession" in Spain. Its first colonel was killed in action in 1706, and its second (Killegrew) at Almanza in 1707. As Pepper's Dragoons, the 8th shared in the glories of Almenara and Saragossa in 1710; and, later, it earned the names of several battles and sieges in India beside those which it is authorised to bear. In 1759, Inniskilling raised yet one more cavalry regiment, but the "20th Inniskilling Dragoons" had only a brief existence, being disbanded in the great reduction of the Army in 1763. The three Inniskilling Foot Regiments, raised in 1689, were soon after consolidated into that one which was so long and so honourably known as the 27th Inniskilling Regiment, and which may still be traced under the abbreviated title of the "First Battalion of the Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers." As Tiffen's regiment, the 27th served some campaigns under King William in Ireland and afterwards on the Continent till 1697. During its varied and arduous services in the West Indies, in America, in Flanders, in Egypt, in the Peninsular war, in South Africa, and in India, the 27th always maintained its high reputation for valour and discipline. But its greatest honour was won at Waterloo, where 478 were struck down out of about 600, yet the remnant left standing among their killed and wounded comrades resolutely kept their ground. Two officers who fought with the 27th at Waterloo have lately passed away: General George Macdonald, Colonel of the 16th Regiment, and General T. Charlton Smith. General Macdonald was the oldest officer in the Army, having got his first commission in 1805. He saw much active service, and received three wounds at Waterloo, in the neck, in the leg, and through the lungs. A brief account of General Smith's services was given in this paper shortly after his death. When comparatively slight services are highly estimated and amply rewarded, we may notice that the loss in killed and wounded, sustained by a weak battalion of the 27th at Waterloo, nearly equalled that of the Army and Navy during the late Egyptian campaign!

INDIAN RELIEFS, 1883-84.

The following programme of the Indian reliefs to be carried out between Portsmouth and Bombay during the season of 1883-84 has been promulgated from the Horse Guards. The dates are calculated for the whole of the voyages being performed viâ the Cape outward and homeward, but at present the decision on that point relates only to the first four voyages. If, therefore, before the intended date of commencement of the fifth voyage it should be found that the ships can proceed through the Suez Canal, the programme will be revised:—

The Malabar, Capt. Henry Hand, will leave with drafts only on Sept. 4, arriving at Bombay on Oct. 21. She will return to Portsmouth on Dec. 18 with time-expired men and invalids.

The Euphrates, Capt. Charles S. Cardale, will leave on Sept. 8 with the A Baty. 1st Brig. R.A., for Dinapore, Bengal, the D Baty. for Secunderabad, Madras, and the F Baty. for Kirkee, Bombay, and artillery drafts, arriving at Bombay on Oct. 26. She will return to Portsmouth on Dec. 24, with the 81st Regt. and time-expired men.

The Jumna, Capt. Uvedale C. Singleton, will leave on Sept. 12 with the 1st Batn. Royal Irish Fusiliers, and drafts for Rawul Pindee, Bengal, arriving on Nov. 1. She returns to Portsmouth on Dec. 31 with time-expired men and invalids.

The Serapis, Capt. Arthur E. Dupuis, will leave on the 16th (calling at Queenstown) with the E Baty. 1st Brig. for Kirkee, Bombay, No. 2 Baty. Scottish Division for Murree Hills, Bengal, and No. 3 Baty. Scottish Division for Fort William, Bengal, arriving on Nov. 7. She returns to Portsmouth on Jan. 4, with the H and L Batteries 1st Brig. and time-expired men and invalids.

The Malabar will leave for the second time on Dec. 30 with drafts, arriving on Feb. 15. She returns to Portsmouth on April 12.

The Euphrates will leave on Jan. 3 with drafts, returning to Portsmouth on April 16.

The Jumna will leave on Jan. 11 with the 2nd Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers for Gibraltar and drafts for India. On disembarking the Fusiliers, she will convey the 1st Batn. North Lancashire Regt. from Gibraltar to Ahmednuggur, Bombay. She returns to Portsmouth on April 25.

The Serapis will leave on Jan. 16 with the 2nd Batn. South Lancashire Regt. for Malta, and drafts for India. On disembarking the troops at Malta, she will convey the 2nd Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers to Kamptee, Madras. She returns on April 29.

The troops returning home next year are not detailed to the ships, so that no dates can be fixed for their arrival in England. They include the 10th Hussars, the M and N Batteries 1st Brig. R.A., Nos. 7 and 8 Batteries 1st Brig. Southern Division (at Aden), the 2nd Batn. Royal Irish Fusiliers (89th), and the 1st Batn. York and Lancaster Regt. (65th) (at Aden). The 7th Dragoon Guards will proceed to Mhow, Bombay, about January, and the following go from India to Aden:—No. 7 Baty. 1st Brig. London Division, No. 8 Baty. 1st Brig. Eastern Division, and the 1st Batn. Essex Regt.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The presence of a force of Rifle Volunteers at Aldershot during the week equal in strength to two brigades of Regulars, has for a brief period imparted much animation to life in camp, ordinarily so methodical and dull. The Volunteers do their brief campaigns cheerfully; they know how long the game is to last, and a week's holiday soldiering at Aldershot is just enough for them. The new annual course of "Military training," that stale, flat, and unprofitable ordeal which, in accordance with recent General Orders and "instructions," the trained "Regular" must annually undergo, has no terrors for the Volunteer. But can it be wondered at if the soldier of the Line, who now knows no rest night or day, should to his brother Rifle Volunteer appear careworn and dejected, and seem to have no heart in his work? Tommy Atkins has become a very dull boy indeed lately.

On Monday the whole of the Volunteer battalions were exercised at company and battalion drills, under their own officers; Tuesday, instruction in attack and defence and skirmishing, under battalion commanders; Wednesday, brigade drill, under Major-Generals commanding brigades; Thursday, field operations in brigade, opposing forces, Infantry only; and yesterday (Friday) a divisional field-day, opposing forces all arms, under the following general idea:—"The advanced guard of a Northern Army, marching from Chobham on Aldershot, has reached the Basingstoke Canal. It receives orders to cross the railway, and endeavour to seize the southern heights of the Fox Hills. The Aldershot force (Southern Army), having been led astray by false intelligence as far as Normandy Common, hears of the enemy's arrival about Curzon bridges. It then endeavours to take up a defensive position to cover Aldershot." The Northern force, in drill order, consisted of one regiment of Cavalry, two batteries R.H.A., three field batteries, and the 2nd and 3rd Infantry Brigades, including the 3rd, 4th, and 5th Provisional Battalions R.V., under the command of Major-General Willis, C.B. The Southern force, in field-day order, consisted of one regiment of Cavalry, one battery R.H.A., three field-batteries, and the 1st Infantry Brigade, including the 1st Provisional Battalion and 1st Dorset R.V., under the command of Major-General Mark Walter, V.C., C.B. Lieutenant-General Sir F. Fitzwygram, Bart., was chief umpire for the Northern force, and Colonel Sir Howard Elphinstone, V.C., K.C.B., C.M.G., R.E., for the Southern force. Each man of the forces was supplied with 20 rounds of blank ammunition. Shortly after the arrival of Lieutenant-General Sir Archibald Alison, Bart., at Romping Down, with the Head-quarters Staff, at 10 a.m., the operations commenced, and were continued with much vigour by both sides until the "cease fire" sounded, shortly after mid-day, when the Northern force seemed to be in a fair way of attaining the object pointed out in the special idea for that force. The whole of the troops were in quarters and tents by 1.30 p.m. Total strength on parade, 9,000 men all ranks, 1,000 horses, 46 guns. The Principal Veterinary Surgeon visited Aldershot on Wednesday, and inspected the horses of the 3rd Hussars and P Battery, 2nd Brigade, R.A., which have been placed under canvas at a distance from the Camp since glanders appeared amongst them. The results of the inspection are that P Battery, 2nd Brigade, will return to permanent barracks shortly, and in the meantime attend all parades and field-days; but the 3rd Hussars will remain isolated for a further period. Not more than a dozen horses have been destroyed in this regiment since the outbreak of the disease. Several horses of the Army Service Corps are at present under observation in the lazaretto, symptoms of a suspicious nature having been observed.

During the men's dinner hour on Wednesday, the fire alarm was sounded in the South Camp, and it was soon made known that the shoemaker's shop of the 26th Cameronians was alight. The Camp fire brigade, under Superintendent Maguire, was speedily on the spot, and a good supply of water being forthcoming, the fire was got under in a remarkably short time. The cause of the fire is not yet known, but an inquiry will be held, as much property has been destroyed. A marked improvement was observable in the Fire Brigade and their appliances since their last effort at fire-extinguishing in the South Camp, in the 85th lines. Mr. Maguire is to be congratulated on this change for the better, which is wholly due to his own exertions, and in spite of the continual changes going on in the temporary brigade under his command. At this Camp, where such vast quantities of valuable property are stored in the most inflammable of buildings, it is really surprising that there is not a permanent camp fire brigade.

The under-mentioned officers have been examined in subjects (a) and (b), Sec. 4, Para. 37, Queen's Regulations, for promotion, and have been found qualified:—Major C. C. Smyth, half-pay; Captain G. R. Heathcote, 26th Cameronians; Lieutenant C. P. Dawson, 2nd Dragoon Guards; Lieutenant R. N. Reade, 85th L.I.; Lieutenants A. C. Le Bailly and F. Kershaw, 84th Regiment.

Lieutenant C. A. Stevenson, East Kent Militia, has joined the School of Instruction for Officers of Auxiliary (Infantry) Forces. This class consists mainly of Volunteer officers.

The following officers, who have been attached to various corps here under the Staff College Regulations since April 14 last, for the purpose of acquiring instruction in those duties and field movements which are not common to their own arms, have been ordered to rejoin their respective corps on completing the course:—Major W. C. James, 2nd Dragoons; Captain J. B. Leefe, R.M.A.; Lieutenant H. de H. Haig, R.E.; Major R. E. Allen, 1st Battalion, 15th; Captain J. M. Gordon, 1st Battalion, 21st; Lieutenant F. W. Bromfield, 2nd Battalion, 22nd; Lieutenant C. M. Hutton, 52nd; Captain T. E. Stevenson, 56th; Major A. W. Morris, 58th; Captain E. Lloyd, Bengal Staff Corps; Lieutenant A. E. Codrington, Coldstream Guards; and Captain Macdonald, R.E.

The under-mentioned Staff officers of the Canadian Dominion Militia have arrived at Aldershot for a course of instruction:—Lieutenant-Colonel Turnbull, Commandant, of the Royal School of Cavalry, who has been attached to the Cavalry Brigade; Lieutenant-Colonel Maunsell, Commandant of the Royal School of Infantry, and Lieutenant-Colonel d'Orsonnens, Staff, who have been attached to the 2nd Infantry Brigade. Other officers of Canadian Militia are under orders to join at the Camp for instructional purposes.

The experimental practices with the division of the Mule Mountain Battery of 7-pounder screw guns, under the command of Captain J. W. Hawkins, have been continued during the week, several hundred rounds of plugged shell having been fired at the Ash ranges for the purpose of testing the carriages and elevating gear. To be serviceable in a mountainous country, these guns, with their appliances, &c., would require to be carried by much heavier and stronger animals than those now being used for this purpose. It is plainly to be seen that the mules are over-weighted, and would speedily break down in a rough country. Hundreds of strong, serviceable animals, of the Spanish breed, purchased during the Egyptian campaign, and admirably adapted for this kind of work, have recently been dispatched from the camp for sale in various parts of the country.

Deputy-Assistant-Commissary-General of Ordnance C. G. Jeans has been appointed to serve temporarily on the Equipment Committee, at Aldershot, until Assistant-Commissary-General of Ordnance Ralph joins from sick leave.

The annual divisional school feast, for the children of soldiers serving in the command, will, by permission of the Lieutenant-General Commanding, be held on Thursday, the 30th inst., in Farnham Park, the use of which has been kindly granted by the Bishop of Winchester. The children will be conveyed to and from the park in military waggons. Formerly, the expenses of this annual school-treat were borne by the officers of the Division, who subscribed liberally for this purpose. Recently, however, the necessary amount has been taken from the canteen funds, at the rate of 1s. for each child.

A grand Military tournament by non-commissioned officers and men of the Aldershot Division will be held in the grounds of Bagshot Park, on Wednesday, the 29th inst., under the patronage of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, in aid of the funds for completing Bagshot Church.

The 5th Provisional Battalion Rifle Volunteers—911 of all ranks, from Middlesex, Surrey, Sussex, and Essex corps—will arrive to-day (Saturday) at the Camp, for a week's drill with the Regulars. This battalion will be encamped on Cove Common, and attached to the 3rd Brigade. The detachment of the 22nd Middlesex Corps, forming portion of the battalion, has been permitted to take with them to the Camp, for experimental purposes, two machine (Nordenfelt) guns. This is the last battalion of Volunteers for Aldershot this season.

Detachments of recruits from the depôts have arrived here during the week for the 26th, 85th, and 3rd Battalion Rifle Brigade.

The Permanent Staff of the 3rd Royal Surrey Militia arrived at the Camp from Kingston-on-Thames on Monday last, for a course of musketry training. The five battalions of Rifle Volunteers which have been drilling with the Regulars during the week will leave the Camp for their homes by special trains from the three stations to-day (Saturday).

Captain H. B. Rich, R.E., is held in readiness to proceed to India. Captain the Hon. A. Sidney, R.H.A., has been transferred to No. 8 Battery, 1st Brigade, Scottish Division, at Aden. Veterinary-Surgeon H. T. W. Mann, A.V.D., has been ordered to Aldershot. Surgeon-Major F. Ferguson, M.D., has assumed medical charge of the officers, women, and children, Permanent Barracks, vice Surgeon-Major C. F. Pollock, M.B. Quartermaster T. Phillips, A.H.C., has been ordered to London. Captain Taylor, 31st Regiment, will proceed to Marchwood, to command the detachment of the regiment there, in succession to Lieutenant Napier, who rejoins head-quarters.

Major C. L. Harvey, 71st Regiment, Garrison Instructor at Dublin, has been transferred to Aldershot in the same capacity, in succession to Major R. H. L. Anstruther, appointed Aide-de-Camp to Lieutenant-General Lord A. G. Russell, C.B., commanding in Canada.

H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has been pleased to approve of Captain C. F. Thomson, 7th Hussars, Brigade-Major at the Curragh, being appointed Brigade-Major of Cavalry at Aldershot, in succession to Lieutenant-Colonel Percy H. S. Barrow, C.M.G., 19th Hussars, who assumes command of his regiment.

H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has been pleased to approve of Brevet Major W. C. James, 2nd Dragoons (Scots Greys), Hon. Secretary to the War Game Committee at Aldershot, being appointed Brigade-Major at the Curragh, in succession to Captain Thomson, 7th Hussars.

H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has been pleased to approve of Lieutenant R. Cutlar-Fergusson, Scots Guards, being appointed to serve as Aide-de-Camp on the Staff of Lieutenant-General Sir Archibald Alison, Bart., K.C.B., commanding the Aldershot Division.

The under-mentioned officers have been appointed to act temporarily on the personal Staff of the Lieutenant-General Commanding the Aldershot Division, from the 1st inst.:—As Aide-de-Camp, Lieutenant H. Lysons, V.C., 90th Light Infantry; as extra Aide-de-Camp, Captain Turnbull, 32nd Light Infantry.

Not a few of the Volunteers at Aldershot Camp during the week were surprised to learn that in the town of Aldershot there are certain "hotels" where refreshments are refused at the public bar to soldiers in uniform, and this in a town which owes its existence to the establishment of a standing camp in Hampshire. The citizen soldiers are disgusted thereat; but the Regulars at the Camp have now become quite accustomed to these indignities. Until recently a wise discrimination was exercised by the proprietor of one of these houses, but this has now been thrown to the winds, and warrant officers, non-commissioned officers, and private soldiers are treated alike, if in uniform. Persons in plain clothes are welcome, and a regimental serjeant-major or quartermaster-serjeant may be thus openly affronted in presence of an officer's servant or mess-waiter in plain clothes, who can drink freely at this bar, where the Queen's uniform is so offensive. Altogether, apart from the legal bearings of the matter, such ill-advised action of sundry Aldershot publicans is calculated to do much injury to the legitimate trade of the town.

A serious accident occurred during yesterday's sham fight. When the 15th Hussars (northern force) were advancing on F Baty. 3rd Brig., R.A. (southern force), Gunner Marshall, in the act of ramming home, had his fingers and right fore-arm shattered by the premature explosion of the charge, the rammer having been blown to pieces over the heads of some of the advancing cavalry.

Reviews.

The British Navy. By Sir Thomas Brassey. (Longmans, Green, and Co.)

The fourth volume of Sir Thomas Brassey's important work is not calculated to prove as interesting as some of its predecessors. This is partly caused by the fact that it is a reprint of Naval publications on a variety of subjects, which extend over a long series of years, so that the collection necessarily becomes disjointed and fragmentary; but at the same time, there remains a copious supply of statistics, facts, and opinions which cannot fail to prove useful to those interested in questions of Naval administration. It is further to be observed that several of the subjects dealt with in this volume have been already disposed of in a satisfactory manner. Among others, the position of the professional officers has been the subject of recent inquiry by a Departmental Committee, the first and second classes of the Naval Reserve have been effectively organised, a beginning has been made in the enrolment of a Colonial Naval Reserve both in Canada and Australia, the constitution of the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers has been further considered, and anxious attention paid to the training system, which is not yet perfected. In the fifth section of this volume will be found some pertinent observations on the subject of our Naval supremacy. In the opinion of Sir T. Brassey, there is no occasion for any apprehension. Russia, France, Germany, and the United States are the only Powers which can be regarded as maintaining a navy for other than strictly defensive purposes. Now, argues the author, England is equal to any three of these four Powers, and the contingency of their being united in an offensive alliance against this country is too remote to be seriously entertained. This is very reassuring information, but very many thoroughly competent men will be found prepared to question its reliability. Both in France and America great strides have been recently made in strengthening their respective fleets, and certainly we have been remiss in not producing the number of armoured ships that we require and have a right to expect. Having cleared the way by these statements, Sir T. Brassey proceeds to consider the question of our own shipbuilding policy, and what should be that of British Naval administrators. He regards it as a certainty, not as a surmise, that many ironclads belonging to other Powers which are included in the enumeration of their fleets are unfit for service, the conclusion being that England can afford to consider the statement a myth, and disregard it. Having endeavoured to show that there is no immediate occasion for misgiving as to the comparative strength of our Navy, the author draws attention to a statement which can easily be shown to be a certainty or not. It is, that many of our ships require new boilers, and are either worn out or obsolete. Surely, if this be the case, not a moment should be lost by the Admiralty in making a thorough investigation of the causes of this rapid deterioration. Having said so much as to the ships of the Navy, the author offers a few observations on the question of reform in the Admiralty in London. This is a truly important question, and one which has also been made interesting by some facts that have recently come to light. It is much to be feared that Sir Thomas Brassey strikes the right nail in the right place when he points to the excessive concentration of authority in the Controller's Office at Whitehall, and shows how the superior officers are fairly overworked, and how too much responsibility falls upon the local officers, who do not receive sufficient encouragement to stimulate their efforts to economise expenditure in the dockyards.

India and Tiger-Hunting. By Julius Barras. (Rastall and Son.)—The raison d'être of this little work seems to be on this wise,—the author had witnessed and taken part in many exciting adventures with man-eating tigers and other gentlemen of that fraternity. It was well known that he had seen a great deal, and it was decided by his friends and acquaintances that he must always amuse them with notes of adventure. This was rather serious, so he thought it better to relieve his mind by one mighty effort. He did so, and two little volumes are the result. It is just the book for youngsters whose grand desire is to go to India and make a personal acquaintance with the monarchs of the jungle. In the third chapter some useful hints are given as regards tiger-shooting in India. The tyro should always remember that no omission at the start can be rectified during the remainder of that trip. One of the most important of these minor considerations is a suitable costume—not a scrap of white, not even the edge of one's pocket-handkerchief should be suffered to appear, as nothing attracts the eye in jungle scenes so much as white linen. The hat is quite the principal article of the toilet. The author's saved his life three times, so that he thinks it right to describe it. "The foundation consisted of a regulation helmet, with the full allowance of brim. On this was fixed a well-wadded and somewhat projecting cover. Inside, and loosely secured to the ventilator by a string, was a wet sponge. A chin-strap completed the edifice. Crowned with such a structure, even the most highly organised brain of a competition Wallah may be expected to escape sunstroke in the hottest districts." This little book should command many readers.

A Treatise on Navigation. By John Merrifield. (Longman.)—This little work, which may be called a students' manual, will supply a want which was very much needed. Mr. Merrifield has spent some of the best years of his life in preparing candidates for the different examinations into which navigation enters, so that he saw the want of a text-book which would embrace all that the different examining boards embody under that head, and prepared the present treatise by enlarging the notes from which he has been in the habit of teaching the advanced part of navigation. The value of a manual of this kind will at once be recognised by those who wish to obtain a scientific knowledge of navigation,—a subject of the very last importance to those who have adopted the Navy or the Mercantile Marine as their course in life.

ENTERTAINMENT TO THE COMMISSIONAIRES.

On last Saturday morning (the 11th), a special train from Charing Cross took about 360 of the Corps of Commissionaires and a number of other guests to Tangley, near Wokingham, Berks, the residence of Capt. Walter, the founder and commanding officer of the corps. The occasion was the inauguration of an "order of merit" for those who, after long and faithful service in the army or navy, had done their duty as Commissionaires for many years to the entire satisfaction of their employers and of their own officers. As soon as the veterans reached the lawn in front of the house, they were formed into three sides of a square, and a very interesting ceremony took place. Serjt.-Major Morant, a fine-looking old soldier, was deputed by his comrades to present to Mrs. Walter, on their behalf, a star of brilliants set in gold, made of the same pattern as the decoration of the order of merit we have mentioned. The Serjeant-Major performed his task with remarkable ability, and was loudly applauded. Capt. Walter suitably acknowledged the handsome gift, and gave a cordial welcome to his men. Dinner was served in a very large marquee, and after the usual loyal toasts had been duly honoured, Capt. Walter presented the order of merit to several of his men, the decorations being affixed by Mrs. Walter. Gen. Shadwell, C.B., on behalf of the Executive Committee, spoke forcibly in favour of the old regimental system, and contrasted it with recent reforms, as they are called. Shortly after dinner, foot races and "tugs of war" commenced, and were kept up till the evening was far advanced. The fine band of the Corps, conducted by Signor Tamplini, played several pieces during the day. Field-Marshal Lord Napier of Magdala, Gen. Sir W. Codrington, and other distinguished officers were present, and showed great interest in the proceedings. The arrangements were superintended by Cols. Wilkinson and Rind and Capt. James, of the Commissionaires. The special train left Tangley about 9 o'clock on its return to town.

CHOLERA.—Appalling as are the reports from Egypt, how few think of our enormous annual sacrifice of valuable lives from scarlet fever, measles, and small-pox. All heads of families should insist upon the daily use, in bed-room, bath-room, and nursery, of WRIGHT'S COAL TAR SOAP, the only true and simple preventive of infectious disease, and a certain cure of all disorders of the skin.

A very creditable poem, entitled "Tel-el-Kebir, the Battle of the Bayonet," part of a series of the "Ballads of the Brave," has been written and published by Serjt. T. J. McCartney, of the Plymouth Division of Royal Marines. His concluding lines on poor Wyatt Rawson are,—

"Another victim sacrificed
To the fierce God of Wars,— Brave Wyatt Rawson,—he who led
The army by the stars,
His latest thought, as there he lies,
Smit by the hand of Fate,
Is one of duty,—'General,
Did I not lead them straight?'"

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks, avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies, are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda water, will be found the least objectionable. Eno's Fruit Salt is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the powers of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use Eno's Fruit Salt, therefore no family should ever be without it. CAUTION.—Legal Rights are protected in every Civilised Country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d. Directions, in Sixteen Languages, how to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at Eno's Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

The Promenade Concerts, Covent Garden, are nightly thronged, and the season is likely to be extended through the winter months. To Drury Lane the panoramic and so-called "patriotic" drama of "Freedom" is attracting all lovers of a showy spectacle, and by judicious retrenchment of some of the "comic" business, the piece has been considerably improved since the first night. At the Adelphi, the revival of "The Streets of London" has proved unexpectedly successful, the scene of Charing Cross on a winter's night being evidently regarded as a most refreshing object to contemplate on a warm evening. The other houses presenting comic operas, burlesques, farcical comedies, realistic melodramas, and American extravaganzas, furnish playgoers with a diversity of entertainment calculated to meet the requirements of every kind of taste.

The Princess's, after a very short vacation, reopens for the autumnal season this evening (Saturday). "The Silver King" will be repeated, and a new comedietta produced.

Mrs. Langtry has commenced this week a provincial tour of three weeks' duration, appearing at Manchester, Glasgow, Birmingham, and Liverpool. Mrs. Langtry leaves England for Canada in October, and after passing through America will extend her professional trip to Australia, beginning her engagements in the Colonies about next July.

A burlesque three-act drama by Mr. F. C. Burnand, entitled, "Ariel," will be the earliest novelty produced at the Gaiety, in September. It is another parody of Shakespeare's play of "The Tempest."

There are at last signs apparent of progress being made in the construction of the Opera House on the Thames Embankment, of which the foundation-stone was laid nearly six years ago. It is understood that the freeholders, Messrs. Tod-Heatley, Morris, and Quilter, have agreed to grant Mr. J. H. Mapleson a lease for 50 years, at a maximum rental of £6,000 per annum.

SOLDIERS' BALANCES UNCLAIMED.

Sir,—The many complaints as to the scant publicity at present given to the lists of money left by soldiers dying in the service of the State have resulted in Sir Walter Barttelot, M.P., moving for and obtaining a return in the following form:—"Army (Soldiers' Balances Unclaimed) Return showing the total receipts from soldiers' unclaimed balances since the passing of the Regimental Debts Act, 1863, the payments made thereout within seven years of the soldiers' decease; the amount of the payments made subsequently; the names and descriptions of the deceased soldiers, and the amount awaiting distribution in each case at the date when the amounts were last advertised in the London Gazette." The return was duly presented to Parliament on July 12, and ordered "to lie upon the table." Not conceiving it possible that the authorities would raise any difficulty as to the printing of the return, I recently applied for a copy, and was told that the return had not been ordered to be printed. I have since been informed, on very good authority, that it is not intended to print the return, "on account of the cost." May I ask your powerful aid towards endeavouring to obtain the publication of the valuable return obtained by Sir Walter Barttelot? The more lengthy the return, the greater the need of publicity. The reasons of publicity are these:—The Regimental Debts Act, 1863, provides for the publication in the London Gazette of particulars of "Unclaimed Balances" due to the next-of-kin of deceased soldiers. About 160 of these lists have been published, containing many thousands of names, and the result of London-Gazette publicity is said to have resulted in a "Crown windfall" of about £4,000 a year. If this be so, a good case for greater publicity is made out. Many of our soldiers are thrifty men, and it is surely only just that every effort should be made on the soldier's death to trace his next-of-kin. As evidence of the soldier's thriftiness, I extract the following, from lists published in 1882:—

Rank, Name, and Regiment.	Amount.
Corpl. Henry Burrell, C Brigade R.A.	£152	9	10
Gunner Patrick Casey, 66th Regiment	106	11	11
Serjt. John Dwyer, 28th Regiment..............	120	12	5
Serjt. William Green, 2nd Batn. 8th Regiment	287	6	11
Pte. Thomas Holland, 2nd Batn. 1st Regiment	164	0	5
Gunner Granville Hall, Royal Artillery	110	8	11
Pte. William Jakes, 4th Hussars..................	148	17	0
Pte. William Kirby, 66th Regiment	124	19	9
Pymr.-Serjt. Martin, 9th Lancers	285	18	10
Pte. Arthur Neale, 10th Hussars	107	7	3
Pte. Frederick Poole, 85th Regiment............	112	16	11
Pte. William A. Thomas, 67th Regiment	124	13	8

This year, the largest "soldier's unclaimed balance" yet recorded is announced, namely, Corpl. D. McCristol, £518 18s. 4d. The return would probably have a large sale; it would also give a spur to recruiting, as young men thinking of entering the Army would see that it is possible for even a private soldier to save a considerable sum of money for a rainy day, or as a "windfall" for his next-of-kin.—I am, &c.,

Edward Preston,

IT is with very great satisfaction, not, however, free from surprise, that we read the report, necessarily brief, and, perhaps, not very perfect, under the circumstances, of Lord Hartington's statement in the House last week respecting the supply of recruits, in the course of the discussion on the vote for the Army Reserve. Making every allowance for the official disposition to take a rosy view of matters of administration connected with a service, any failure or inefficiency in which involves heavy responsibility and censure upon the administrator, we must accept the direct averment of the Secretary of State for War with reference to the improvement in the recruiting service without challenge, if not without qualification. An inflow to the ranks of 36,000 recruits a year, is a matter for congratulation. But to one position laid down by the Minister for War, we must express our dissent. Lord Hartington declares that the long-service system failed; and that, therefore, necessarily, the country, refusing to accept conscription, had to take short-service, with the creation of a Reserve, as the only possible alternative. Now, we are of opinion—having had some experience of the working of the English Army in the field and out of it, and being in communication with many of its most distinguished officers for the last quarter of a century—that the long-service did not fail, but that it was exceedingly badly administered, and that it was the Administration which had long service in hand that brought it, perhaps designedly, to grief. Had the inducements which are now offered to short-service men been held out to the recruits at the time the reorganisation mania afflicted our rulers, a slight increase of pay, accompanied by a bounty and a pension, would have secured an ample supply of men adequate for the duties, all round, of the British Army; and we should not be subject to the humiliation of continual hocus-pocus work, perpetrated officially, to make the Army capable of performing the very ordinary work which it has recently been expected to do. Of the Egyptian Campaign, we shall say no more than that it was exceedingly well managed in many respects, and in some was notoriously and scandalously mismanaged. But, that a country of forty millions of people—the richest on earth, with the greatest Fleet and the largest commercial resources—should take pride to itself for sending out an army of some 20,000 odd men, made up of contingents, scratchings, pickings, and scrapings from nearly every corps, at home and abroad, is astounding, nay, humiliating. A quarter of a century, and more, has elapsed since England sent out an Army of greater strength—a much more formidable undertaking—to invade the greatest Military Power on earth, and brave its legions in front of its most redoubtable stronghold. It is true that the formation of that Army was effected to some extent by the same means as those which were used in furnishing forth the Expedition of 1882; but the regiments which descended on the shore of the Crimea at Old Fort, although they had been subjected to a trying climate in Bulgaria, and had suffered greatly from cholera, were able, notwithstanding, to do the work of men and soldiers in a very effective manner on September 20, 1854, and afterwards. But the short-service system which has been introduced in lieu of it, though it has gradually developed itself in the direction of long service, under the cover of many excuses, by the authorities, has not been attended by brilliant results. The reformers have put Territorial smocks upon the regiments; have given them long descriptive, geographical, or titular names, to make them resemble, in that respect at least, the proprietary regiments of the German Army, but dropping the numbers, which in that army are sedulously maintained; and then, our authorities, juggling with the terms of service, altering them continuously (we are glad to say, however, in a proper direction), say, "Here is a short-service army! How well it is working! We are getting 36,000 men a year!" But they do not put very prominently forward the fact that of these 36,000 recruits, a very large proportion have only a chest-measurement of 31 in., and that many do not much exceed the moderate altitude of 5 ft. 3 in., and this out of a population remarkable, formerly, at any rate, for muscular vigour and development. With the deficiency which Lord Hartington admits to exist in the ranks at present, we have a sharp set-off to the advantages of the Reserve; but we admit, and certainly we hope, that the deficiency will be altogether removed, although there is certainly no sign of its being lessened in the case of the Brigade of Guards, two regiments of which are short 400 men. It surely does not speak much for the foresight of the large staff of gentlemen, who, at least, might look a little before their noses when they are doing their work at Pall Mall, that they never foresaw that a large number of men, enlisted under the old system of 1870 and 1871, would be taking their discharge in 1882 and in the present year. Lord Hartington says, indeed, that had that been foreseen, the Government would have resorted to a proceeding, which the House of Commons might have questioned, of keeping the Army above its establishment. It would have been far better, however, had the Government applied itself to consider the best means of retaining the services of men who are now rushing out of the Army, scuttling with all haste into civil life. Honourable Members may cry "Hear, hear!" when they are assured that a return to long service is impossible; but we observe that the authorities are doing their best to increase the experience and to prolong the services of the soldier on whom we must rely for the performance of military duty all over the world. As long as we have the substance, we shall not quarrel about the name of it, and we are quite ready to make a present to the Government of the day of the terms which they like to apply to the Army and the conditions of service, as long as they are efficient.

IT is a mistake to throw good money after bad. That, practically speaking, was the burden of General Laurie's argument in the admirable paper he read at the Royal United Service Institution, "On the Protection of our Naval Base in the Pacific." In that paper he contended that our present position at Esquimault is untenable, and that, no matter how we attempt to patch it up, it will be untenable to the end of the chapter. If, therefore, argues General Laurie, a naval base in that distant region is a necessity, it is better far to begin de novo, and search for one which is, if possible, impregnable, or, at all events, capable of stout defence, and secure from assault by coup de main. With the limited resources we are likely to have at our command in British Columbia, instead of frittering money away on one hopelessly incurable, it would be wiser to secure a better spot. That a strong squadron and a strong naval base are absolutely necessary for the defence of our immense interests, and our great trade in the Pacific, scarcely requires a word of argument, and the approaching completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway will greatly add to our responsibilities, for an enormously increased trade carried on in British ships must inevitably result, which will at no distant date be further developed by the piercing of the Panama Isthmus. Not only the United States, but Chili, China, and Japan are fast becoming owners of powerful ironclad squadrons, which, in the event of trouble, would be capable of working irreparable mischief. But it is from Russia we are exposed to the greatest risk. Every act points to the intention of Russia to remove her chief Naval depôt from the land-locked Euxine and Baltic to Vladivodstock, on what is practically an open coast, whence her Alabamas could work. Our Squadron should, therefore, be thoroughly efficient, and being far removed from the home dockyards, that efficiency must mainly depend on its depôt. The present depôt is at Esquimault, and it was to point out its defects the paper we are noticing was mainly directed. General Laurie believes that the history of the Naval yard at Esquimault is only one instance out of many of how we "drift" into our arrangements. From the smallest beginnings, it has, he says, accidentally drifted into its present important position, without any reference whatever to its capacity for defence. But this should have been a primary consideration which ought not to have been and cannot be ignored. It is now asserted that it cannot be made secure, except at an expenditure and by a force beyond our power to afford it. Some other position should be selected at once to meet our needs, and this General Laurie says he has found in Burrard Inlet. He speaks with no ordinary experience and authority, for nearly twenty-two years of his service have been spent on the Canadian Staff, and in British Columbia, and in organising the defences of the Dominion. If Burrard Inlet possesses half the advantages General Laurie claims for it, he has done good service in calling attention to its merits, and the sooner we make up our minds to adopt it as a base in the Pacific, the better. But we consider a position on the main land, open to a coup de main from the land side, and exposed to hostile operations by military forces where we must necessarily be less ready to defend it than we would be to resist an attack by sea, even more dangerous than the position of Esquimault; and we consider, at all hazards, and at any expense, that Vancouver's Island should be fortified, and maintained as our Naval base in the Pacific, with subsidiary stations, wherever convenient, for coaling stations. In that manner, Burrard Inlet could be utilised, and the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the West could be fortified and protected.

THE Votes for the Army Medical Department and the Reserve were introduced only last Saturday night, and the important debates on them attracted little attention. The Press is jaded and tired, like the House of Commons at the end of the Session; but the subjects discussed last week, in a House of some sixty Members, were of the very greatest importance. To the observations of Sir H. Fletcher on the condition of the Army Medical Department, and on the Report of Lord Morley's Committee, Lord Hartington gave no reply; but he gave a promise that no Warrant would be issued on the Report till the House had had an opportunity of discussing the recommendations.

in other words, that nothing will be done till next year. The Army Medical Department will, therefore, be in a state of suspense a little longer. The Brigade of Guards will retain their exceptional system for the present, but Sir H. Fletcher failed to obtain any expression of opinion from Lord Hartington with regard to the appropriation of the Guards' Hospitals, and the innovations introduced into the medical department of the Brigade which Sir J. MacCormack desires to develope. There is a great fallacy in the argument of Lord Hartington,—that, because in war-time, Field Hospitals and a general Medical Staff are necessary, therefore the regimental system should not be maintained in time of peace. There is such a thing as sympathy, and there is such an influence as sentiment among men, whether they wear red coats, or black, or invisible grey, and no one having the smallest acquaintance with the feeling of regimental officers, and with soldiers, can assert that they do not pay more heed to Medical officers with whom they are acquainted, than to strangers, and that they do not attach importance to the association of Surgeons with the corps with which they are doing duty. It is not in war alone that the comfort and efficiency of regiments are to be looked to. A good regimental Surgeon will keep the men in his charge, during peace in good condition and fit to work when war comes. If the quacks and doctrinaires are so obstinately wedded to their theories that they will not allow the attachment of Surgeons to regiments to acquire a reasonable strength and growth, at all events let them consent to an association of Surgeons with the corps to which they are assigned for a sufficient number of years to make them acquainted with the officers and men whom it is their duty to keep in health.

THE decision of the Government to submit the proceedings of the Clyde Court-martial to the Law Officers of the Crown will, we believe, meet with general approval in the Service, and it is satisfactory to see that the authorities are amenable to argument and pressure when a case is made out for investigation. We hope there will be something more than a legal opinion on technical points forthcoming. There ought to be justice. The Government should have full light thrown on the case, and thus remove all doubts in connection with this truly unpleasant episode in the career of a gallant officer. Commander Heron placed himself in a very unfortunate position; but the cause was, in our opinion, too great a confidence in the honesty of those under him. We hope the Admiralty will revise the sentence on Commander Heron, and re-establish him in his profession. His case has been well sifted, and the conclusions arrived at, both in and out of Parliament, are sufficiently clear to establish the fact that Commander Heron was not justly dealt with. Making every allowance for the feelings of his relatives and friends who advocated his cause so earnestly on Tuesday last, there were sufficient grounds in their arguments to induce the Government to take the step they have promised; while the opinions of independent Members showed that they viewed the case merely in justice to an officer who had served the country faithfully for more than thirty years, and that they were not guided by party feeling. We attach great importance to the expression of satisfaction of Sir Richard Cross, who, it is well known, would not accord his approval in an unjust cause. It is to be regretted that compulsion was necessary, and the decision of the Government shows how faulty the legal machinery of the Admiralty is and how ill adapted to meet the judicial requirements of the Navy. We hope this case will lead to a complete revision of the Naval Discipline Act, the system of trial by court-martial, and the introduction of a proper method of reviewing the proceedings and sentence by independent members of the legal profession. We much regret that when the case of the late Commander of the Clyde was discussed in the House this week, the friends of that officer inveighed so severely against the conduct of Commander Henry Compton Best. We cannot believe but that the latter officer followed the dictates of gentlemanly feeling and common justice, when called upon to aid at an inquiry into the charges in reference to the Clyde, even if he were on unfriendly terms with the officer then in command of that vessel. The fact of officers being prejudiced against each other is not one of which the Admiralty or Departmental heads are generally aware, though we have no doubt that had their Lordships, or the Admiral-Superintendent of the Reserves, known that a feud existed between those two officers, steps would have been taken to relieve Commander Best from an unpleasant position; and the fact is almost corroborated by the remarks of the Secretary of the Admiralty, who, in fairness to Commander Best, considered that the House ought not to condemn that officer, until it had heard what he had to say against the accusation. We are sure that, without wishing to prejudice the case of Mr. Maxwell-Heron, the brother-officers of Commander Best, and the Naval service generally, will support him in this matter, debarred as he is by his position outside the House of Commons from meeting the charges of disgraceful conduct attributed to him by some of its Members, and that the Admiralty will afford him full opportunity of refuting them. The minutes and opinions of the Court of Inquiry, of which Commander Best was a member, are confidential documents, which the Admiralty cannot be obliged to produce. As their Lordships were guided thereby as to the necessity for trying the Commander of the Clyde by court-martial, their decision can be formed therefrom whether Commander Best displayed prejudice, and evinced any semblance of ill-feeling, availing themselves of the confidential opinions on those points of the other officers who were present at the inquiry.

THE relations between Germany and Russia, however strained they may be, will never be broken off by open hostility as long as the aged Emperor-King lives, but the Germans are a sentimental race, and they are much under the influence of race sympathies, as the world saw in the Schleswig-Holstein insurrection in 1852 and the war against Denmark in 1864, not to speak of the reappropriation of Alsace-Lorraine in 1871. For many years back they have been listening indignantly to the voice of complaint from the German populations of Esthonia, Livonia, and Courland, which perhaps is heard through magnifying trumpets; and there is a settled purpose in many Teuton heads of reclaiming these provinces some day from the grasp of the Czar. There are other pretexts for quarrel when the time comes, and the Russian Army turns to measure swords with the conquerors of France who have been rather "lording" it over the world in the east of Europe. It is not easy to understand a description of a strategical frontier without plans, but any of our readers who may be interested in the subject can, with the aid of a fair map, form a fair idea of the defences of the two Empires by reading the following account of the works. The province of Eastern Prussia has for its principal defence the powerful fortress of Königsberg, the works of which extend to the Frischer Haff, the entrance of which is protected by the fortress of Pillau, by very strong forts on the coast, and by submarine mines. To the north, the extremity of the Prussian frontier and the Bay of Memel are protected against a naval attack by strong coast fortifications and mines, but the town of Memel, very important commercially, is open, and would, in the event of an invasion, have to be evacuated, together with the territory bounded on the one side by the Kurishe [or Curische] Haff, and on the other by the frontier, and which is separated to the south from the rest of Eastern Prussia by the lower part of the valley of Memel. The position of Königsberg is covered to the south by the fortifications of Lötzen and Osterodes, and the strategic routes connecting these two strong places. The system of fortifications around Königsberg communicates to the south with those of Thorn, the importance of which, both as a great railway junction and a strategic point, cannot well be exaggerated. Thorn, which is at once an offensive and defensive position, would, like Warsaw in former days, serve as a point d'appui for a large army, and enable it to cover the territory between the lakes outside Königsberg and the valley of the Netze. The second line of defence is formed by the lower course of the Vistula, with the fortress of Dantzic and the têtes de pont of Graudentz and Marienwerden. Dantzic is of great importance, not only by reason of its position and strength, but by reason of its communications with the sea, and of the bay close to the peninsula of Heba. Graudentz has been abandoned as a fortress, but its ancient fortifications are still strong enough to protect the passage across the river. The territory commanded by Thorn comprises, to the south and south-west, the sandy tract, broken here and there by stone quarries, situated between the Vistula, the Netze, and the Brabe, which can only be traversed by way of Bromberg. The principal position of Germany vis-à-vis to Warsaw is Posen, on the Warthe [or Warta], this river cutting in two the country through which an invading army might march. The northern part would not be very well adapted to operations, owing to the nature of the soil and the abundance of small lakes, while in the southern part the Obra quarries would form a serious obstacle to the advance of the enemy. An army could not leave Posen in its rear without detaching a sufficient number of men to blockade it; while not far off is the fortress of Glogau, on the Oder, which has been very materially strengthened of late years. The position of Posen-Glogau is supported by the fortress of Kustrin, which covers the centre of the country,—that is to say, Berlin. In the event of an invasion of Silesia—the principal fortresses of which, Neisse and Glatz, on the left bank of the Oder, are directed rather against Austria than Russia—the enemy would perhaps march upon the open town of Breslau; but, considering how far an army coming from Russia would be from its base of operations, with few lines of railway communicating with that base, and how it would be liable to be taken in flank and in rear by the garrison of Thorn, this would be a very hazardous undertaking,—so hazardous, that the Germans have deemed it scarcely worth taking into account. The frontier defences of Russia are even more elaborate. As the Polish provinces run like a wedge between Eastern Prussia and Silesia, the system of defence has been grouped around Warsaw, along the banks of the Vistula. The Alexander citadel, originally intended to repress any revolutionary movement of the population, more than to protect the city from a foreign foe, now converts Warsaw into a place of arms. This fortress, situated upon the left bank of the Vistula, is supported by detached forts, and would be a great support to an army concentrated near Warsaw, and enable it to protect the city, which is of great importance, not only as a commercial, but as a railway centre. The faubourg of Praga, on the right bank of the Vistula, though fortified, has not the military importance it once had, since so much ground has been built upon; but there are two bridges, one for the railway and the other for carriage traffic and foot passengers, connecting the two sides of the river. A few miles further north is the fortress of Modlin, which forms the right wing of the position of Warsaw, and covers the confluence of the Narew and the Vistula. The enceinte and citadel of Modlin are on the right bank, and there are two têtes de pont on the left bank. The fortress of Sierock covers Warsaw to the north, and protects the right flank of the position of the Vistula. The fortress of Ivangorod (Demblin) constitutes the left wing of the position of Warsaw, and, also situated on the Vistula, where the Wieprz runs into it, Ivangorod is protected to the front by that river like the two other fortresses. It is enclosed by ramparts, with two advanced lunettes, and is supported on the left bank by earthworks very much like a tête de pont. Behind the line of Ivangorod, Warsaw, Modlin, and Sierock, is the powerful fortress of Brest Litovski, which is situated upon the right bank of the Bug, at its confluence with the Mukhaviec. Inside the town is a strongly-fortified barrack, built upon an island; while upon the left bank there are four detached forts. This place derives its importance from its strategic position upon the borders of the Rottritna marshes, which divide into two parts the territory along which an invading army could advance. An army advancing from Warsaw towards the north-east would be threatened on its right flank by Brest Litovski, which is connected with Warsaw by the Tirospol railway, and with Kieff by another railway. Kieff, one of the wealthiest and most populous cities in Russia, is situated upon the right bank of the Dneiper, which at this point is more than half a mile broad, the passage of the stream being defended by a tête de pont on the left bank. It is a very important strategic position, with a strong citadel and advanced works. Around Kieff are grouped, in the direction of the Austrian frontier, the fortresses of Lutsk and Dubno, both situated on the Styr, to the north-east of the Austrian city of Lemberg. Lutsk is on the line of railway from Brest Litovski to Rovno and Dubno, on the line from Rovno to Lemberg. From a strategic point of view, Nicolaieff, near the mouth of the Dneiper, and the fortresses of Bender and Kherson, which cover the south and the coasts of the Black Sea, are also connected with Kieff. With regard to the vast plain to the north-east of Warsaw and to the north of the Rottritna marshes, there are, it may be noted, two main lines of railway leading to St. Petersburg and one to Moscow, and these are routes which an invading army would have to follow. But the railways would be of little service, as the Russians would either destroy them or evacuate the rolling-stocks, and there is a difference of gauge which would render it impossible for the rolling-stock of the German railways to be used on these lines. But supposing that an invading army had traversed the plains in question, it would have to cross the Dwina, with the fortress of Dunaburg, which is of great strength, owing to its position in a marshy country and its fortifications, to deal with. The mouth of the Dwina, in the Gulf of Riga, is also very strongly fortified. Between Warsaw and Moscow is the fortress of Bobrinsk, which was of great importance before the construction of the railway between the two cities, but which is of less consequence now, because, being situated upon the Berezina and upon the edge of the Rottritna marshes, it is too far south of the line to menace the flank of an army advancing in this direction. Thus it will be seen that the defences of Russia are stronger on the Austrian than on the Prussian frontier.

The state of the Navy is being seriously considered by the Naval Lords of the Admiralty. They admit freely that much of what has been said by Lord Henry Lennox is true, but—and here comes the rub—were Lord Henry Lennox's party in office, would its leaders alter the "Treasury policy"? That is the question. That the Treasury will have to be more liberal towards the Navy is certain, or many millions will be squandered in a panic to make good defects arising from injudicious stinginess.

We referred last week to the hardship of placing subalterns in the Royal Marine Artillery who had failed to reach the standard of examination for that corps over the head of an officer who had been successful thereat, and already was entered at Eastney. On Thursday last Sir H. Wolff questioned the Secretary of the Admiralty thereon, and was informed by the Junior Civil Lord that,—"Of the nine probationary Lieutenants of the Royal Marine Artillery who presented themselves for the final examination this year, only one passed—Mr. L. E. Gordon, of seniority September 1, 1881. It being necessary to provide officers for the Marine Artillery, the Admiralty appointed a Committee to consider whether any of the candidates who had passed through the College during the last three years, but failed to reach the standard for the Artillery, might be admitted with advantage to the service. Five officers have been appointed, on the recommendation of the Committee. The seniority of two of them is September 1, 1880, and therefore they could not have been placed below Mr. Gordon, who sustains some slight disadvantage owing to a measure considered necessary for the public interest."

The Vulcan Company of Stettin have been entrusted by the Chinese Government with the construction of a deck-armoured cruiser, in addition to the ironclads Ting Yuen and Chen Yuen. Length on water-line, 236 ft. 8 in.; beam, 34 ft. 5 in.; depth of hold, 23 ft. 7 in.; draught of water aft, 15 ft. 9 in.; depth of side of armoured deck below water-line, 4 ft. 9 in.; displacement, 2,355 tons; indicated horse power, 2,800; crew, 180 officers and men. Armament, two 8¼-in. and one 5⅞-in. Krupp guns (35 calibres long), four torpedo-cannon with 12 torpedoes, and six Hotchkiss machine-guns. The three heavy guns are mounted in two machine-gun-proof turrets, viz., the two 8¼-in. guns forward, and the 5½-in. gun aft. The twin-screw engines are expected to give a speed of 15 knots. The vessel will be brig-rigged for her passage, but on arrival the foremast will be removed.

The Channel Squadron, which has just returned to England after its summer cruise, will remain at the home ports till the middle of next month, and then proceed for the autumn cruise. The Squadron will rendezvous at Portland prior to commencing the cruise, and return about the end of November.

We regret to hear that the state of Captain John D'Arcy, H.M.S. Duncan, at present a patient in Melville Hospital, is so serious as to cause considerable anxiety to his friends.

The torpedo-boats Nos. 63 and 64, built by Messrs. Normand and Co., of Havre, for the French Government, lately made their official trial-trips, when the mean speeds attained during a three-hours' run were for No. 63, 20·25 knots, and for No. 64, 20·51 knots. Messrs. Normand have received an order for ten further boats of the first-class, the dimensions of which are:—Length, 108 ft. 3 in.; beam, 10 ft. 9 in.; depth, 8 ft. 6 in.

The First Lord of the Admiralty has at his disposal a nomination for Christ's Hospital, for the son of a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy. Applicants must be between the ages of eight and ten. Preference will be given to the sons of officers who have been killed, or have died in the service. Applications, addressed to the Private Secretary to the First Lord of the Admiralty, will be received up to March 31, 1884.

The Champion and Daring are to be paid off and recommissioned on the China stations. New crews will be sent out in the Himalaya about December next.

From intelligence received from Cape Coast Castle up to July 20, it appears that the Opal, Captain A. T. Brooke, was about to start in company with the Flirt and Bulldog for a cruise round the West Coast of Africa, as far south as Mossamedes, when the Algerine would replace the Flirt, and the whole proceed to St. Helena, where the Starling would join them, and they then continue the cruise to Ascension, ultimately reaching Cape Coast Castle about Christmas. The Alecto was to remain in the Bights Division during the absence of the other vessels.

There was recently launched from the yard of Messrs. Sir W. G. Armstrong, Mitchell, and Co., a steel cruiser for the Chilian Navy, named Esmeralda, constructed in innumerable water-tight compartments. Her length is 276 ft.; beam, 42 ft.; depth, 29 ft. 3 in.; displacement, 3,000 tons; draught of water, 18½ ft.; armament, two 10-inch Armstrong B.L. guns at bow and stern, three 6-in. Armstrong B.L. guns, and torpedo apparatus. The twin-screw engines, by Messrs. R. and W. Hawthorn, of Newcastle, will be of 5,000 horse-power, estimated to give a speed of 17 knots. The cruiser will be provided with a very light rig, and the saving in weight will be turned to account in the coal-bunkers.

Capt. C. P. Fitzgerald, appointed to the Royal Naval College at Greenwich, will take over that position at the end of the month in succession to Capt. F. D. Bedford.

The Secretary to the Admiralty was asked, on Tuesday last, whether the Order in Council of October 23, 1877 (Clause C), contained the words, "Assistant-paymasters, with over eight years' seniority as such, to rank with lieutenants of under eight years' seniority;" whether an Admiralty order was issued a few months subsequently stating that the above clause was "to be considered to mean to rank with, but after, lieutenants of under eight years' seniority;" whether such interpolation virtually took away from those officers the rank granted to them by her Majesty; and whether, in the opinion of the law officers of the Crown, such alteration by authority of the Admiralty Board was legal. Sir T. Brassey stated in reply that when the Order in Council of October 23, 1877, was issued, it was found that the words "but after" had been inadvertently omitted from the clause to which the hon. Member refers. It was found necessary to amend the circular, in consequence of the anomalies which the omission of these words introduced, even within the Paymasters' department itself. For instance, it gave an assistant-paymaster of over eight years' standing higher relative rank than he would have when promoted to the higher rank of paymaster." We have always regretted, that when it was found necessary to increase the rank of assistant-paymasters, in 1877, for the purpose of placing them on an equal footing with engineers, the relative rank of paymasters was not considered at the same time. There is but a slight difference in the ages of assistant paymasters and engineers, when promoted to the "senior grade;" yet the latter at once attain rank with, but after, Lieutenants of eight years' standing; and after ten years' seniority rank with commanders; and can attain even higher relative rank, while paymasters rank on promotion only with junior lieutenants, and have to acquire 15 years' seniority before they can rank with commanders. Taking the average age of engineers when promoted to chief engineer to be 38½, and that of assistant-paymaster on promotion to paymaster as 36½ years, the latter will be nearly 52 and the former only 49 on arriving at the relative rank of commander. This difference of three years may appear immaterial, but we can assert that it is no ordinary hardship to paymasters, as the prospects of promotion are becoming worse every year, and that branch of the service has to occupy, in consequence of age, the most junior position of all others, which largely affects their future, as well as the interests of their wives and children. Under existing regulations, the widow of an engineer of eight years' standing is allowed the same pension as that of a paymaster under eight years' seniority. The widow of a chief engineer of less than ten years' seniority is granted an ordinary pension of £70 per annum, which would not be affected by loss of seniority; while in the case of a paymaster of eight years' standing, his widow would suffer by such a misfortune occurring to her husband. There are many other points, both pecuniary and social, which we could direct attention to, clearing showing the disabilities under which the Accountant Branch of the Navy suffer; but we intend at a future period to enter fully on this subject, and trust that the Admiralty will accord it their generous consideration.

The Russian Fleet in the Mediterranean will probably receive a considerable addition to its strength this autumn.

Captain Alexander Buller, C.B., has been appointed additional to the Royal Adelaide, for the purpose of carrying out the fittings of the guns and hydraulic apparatus for working them on board the Agamemnon, which work he paid great attention to while holding the command of the Cambridge.

In the debate on the Clyde court-martial, the Secretary of the Admiralty informed the House that it was the intention of their Lordships to issue such regulations as would admit of seamen of the Fleet making known any just complaints, if they had been overlooked by their immediate superior. Officers were allowed the privilege, and their Lordships were of opinion that seamen should be accorded similar consideration. Legislation on another subject was also promised. It appears that the Captains of the Excellent and Vernon were both excused from attending the court-martial, on the ground that they were given formal leave to attend special duties. There appears to have been no irregularity in thus allowing them to be absent; the duties devolving on those officers as the heads of the Gunnery and Torpedo Establishments might be largely interfered with, if called away for the ordinary duties of the Fleet. The proviso under which the Superintendents of Dockyards shall not be summoned to sit on courts-martial (N. D. Act, cl. 16, sec. 58), might be extended to those Captains on the Home stations who hold important positions, the duties of which demand their entire attention, and the necessity for their becoming members dealt with by the Admiralty in the same way as for the Admirals and Captains of dockyards.

The Russian Government has decided upon spending 380,000 roubles on military roads in the Crimea. It often takes weeks for supplies from Simpheropol to reach Kertch, 130 miles distant.

We are requested to state that the negative of the Orpheus memorial tablet, taken by Carl Müller, of the Studio, St. James's Palace, last autumn, having been irreparably damaged, a fresh one has been taken by Mr. Walter Hayler, 40 Charing Cross, S.W., from whom copies can be obtained.

From the Annual Register for 1793, we learn that "Colonel Ross, lately arrived from India, has brought with him a newly invented gun-carriage, the peculiar excellence of which is that it raises the piece above the parapet of a fort or battery over which it is fired, and is immediately after brought under cover by the recoil. This carriage is supposed to be one of the greatest improvements in the sciences of artillery and fortification ever made." It would seem from this description as if the invention anticipated the Moncrieff gun-carriage. There is one similarity certainly,—each was announced as a vast improvement, likely to revolutionise the science of fortification.

A discussion that has been in progress for some time past in the Russian and German Press has resulted in the publication of some very interesting railway statistics. If Russia were to attempt to invade Germany, she would have to contend with two serious inconveniences—the fact of most of her frontier railways having only one line of rails, and the distance between the stations, which is rarely less than 12 miles. Russia could only send along each line 12 trains a day, while Germany could despatch 16. Russia has 7 lines converging upon Germany, and Germany 10 running toward Russia. Russia, therefore, could only despatch altogether 84 trains a day to the frontier, while Germany could run 160. If a comparison be made between the railways of the interior, the disadvantages under which Russia labours become even more apparent, Germany being seamed with iron roads, whereas Russia is only intersected at wide intervals. Germany can send to the frontier nine Army Corps in five days, to confront which Russia can only accumulate four.

We are glad to hear that the operation performed by Berlin oculists upon General Todleben has been so far successful that he can see better than he has done for the last three years, and is likely to permanently retain his sight. In Russia his case had been so far despaired of by the St. Petersburg physicians, that they had assured him he would become in a few months totally blind. Although this prediction has proved to be erroneous, the hero of Sebastopol has decided all the same to retire into private life on his return to Russia.

The French have been highly flattered at the manner in which Lord Wolseley spoke of their land forces in his examination before the Channel Tunnel Committee, for a translation of the proceedings has been published for the benefit of our neighbours. However, French military men are not wholly satisfied with the way in which the machine is being worked, and fear that the millions of men which France is capable of putting in the field will be found to be men, and not soldiers, should any rough work have to be done. What does one see in France? That the class of 1878 which ought to have served until June, 1884, have been provisionally liberated. Most of these men have served only three years, and those who are in Tunis, and those who are not to leave until after the autumn manœuvres, will have only served three years and ten months. The French officers who are in favour of long service—and they are legion—see with despair the period of service being gradually pared down, and the Regular Army lapsing into a kind of National Guard.

The condition of recruiting, so far as it affects the Artillery, may be estimated by the fact that a depôt battery in a southern district in England has at the present moment five drivers and two gunnery recruits!

At the very end of the Session, in the last week, the Army Estimates were brought on again for discussion by the Secretary of State for War. Under Vote 19, Retired Pay, the question of compensation claimed by Purchase Colonels and Colonels with Purchase rights—who were compulsorily removed from the service under Warrant of June, 1881—was brought forward by Sir Walter Barttelot. The speech is extremely badly reported; but the case was ably laid before the House. Sir Walter Barttelot asked for a Committee of the House or independent arbitration, to investigate these claims, as the Colonels deny the right of Government to remove Purchase Officers from the Army without the return of their purchase-money. And, moreover, they consider the difference between £365 and £420 per annum—viz., £55—a totally inadequate compensation for loss of profession and disturbance. Lord Hartington stated, in his reply, that the Colonels had sunk their money for the prospects he stated, viz., £365 per annum, which is not correct, as money was invested in commissions for the attainment of the prizes of the profession and the honours obtainable. From these they were cut off by the Warrant of 1881. Lord Hartington further stated, in reply, that the claims in question had been fully considered by the Department (the War Office), which is just what the Colonels have so decidedly objected to throughout, as they consider that a Government committed to the abolition of Purchase, without the return of purchase-money, were unfit to consider the claims, as a court of appeal on their own awards; moreover, "that it would be impossible for the Government to accede to the proposal for the appointment of a Committee, because he believed its result would be shown that, from a pecuniary point of view, the Colonels had been equitably and even liberally dealt with." If so, the Committee should have been granted, to prove the vaunted justice and liberality of the War Department; but as it has been refused, the inference throughout the service will be that the War Department had not a leg to stand on, and were afraid of an Arbitration Committee. We are afraid that this one-sided decision will not finish this contention. It is to be borne in mind that the lateness of the season at which the discussion took place (August 21st) was all against the officers, as most of their supporters had left London, and many were absent, owing to the uncertainty maintained regarding the exact date for this discussion for more than six weeks.

Last week we gave a very brief account of the eight regiments which were formed in Enniskillen. In addition to all those regiments which were actually raised by that patriotic and war-like little town, we find that in May, 1744, Nicholas Loftus Hume began also to raise another independent regiment of horse, called the Enniskilliners, to consist of 1,000 gentlemen. As we have not seen any further notice of this regiment, we presume that, for some reason, Mr. Hume's praiseworthy intention was not carried out.

The House of Commons, we notice, passed Votes amounting to nearly six millions of the Army Estimates in the late hours of Saturday night and Sunday morning—almost without discussion, and in the presence of three Members only. A Select Committee on the Estimates would be preferable to such performances.

A torpedo-boat was launched on Saturday last from the works of Messrs. Thornycroft and Co., for Victoria. The vessel is finely designed for her purpose, and is armed with four 19-ft. torpedoes and two steel shell machine-guns. She has engines of 800 horse-power, and is in length 113 feet. The speed contracted for is 18 knots, which she is expected to exceed on her trial at the measured mile. The christening was performed by Mrs. Childers and her husband, after whom the vessel is named. The Chief Constructor of the Navy, several officers, and a numerous party, including many ladies, were present.

Fleet Circular No. 29 L, August 10, 1883, announces that the Deputy-Judge-Advocate of the Fleet will be paid an annual fee, instead of allowances. Officiating Judge-Advocates at home and abroad will not be allowed more than £10 10s. for any one day, whatever number of courts-martial they may attend on that day. The fee of £3 for stationery, &c., at Sheerness, Portsmouth, and Plymouth will no longer be paid. The allowance to an Officiating Judge-Advocate, if the Court shall sit one day, will be £4; if more than one day, for each day, £3. He is not to be paid more than £10 10s. for any one day.

The steam trials of the unarmoured steel cruiser Leander, 10, 3,750 tons, 5,000 horse-power, having been considered unsatisfactory, further trials are to be postponed until the other ships of the same class—the Amphion, at Pembroke Yard, and the Arethusa and Phaeton, at private yards at Glasgow—have made the official trials.

Major-Gen. Sir Frederick Goldsmid and party passed Sierra Leone on Aug. 7, on their way to the Congo.

The Watchful, sister-ship to the Mistletoe, was tried last week at Plymouth with very satisfactory results.

A movement is on foot to form an Army and Navy Warrant Officers' Club, and a building in New Coventry Street has been secured for the purpose.

The breaking-up of the Salamis at Sheerness has been commenced by dockyard hands. The wood portion of the vessel is very rotten.

* These non-effectives cost the Egyptian Government about £52,000 a year, at the rate of £4 per man per month. The General who telegraphs home that the health of the troops is satisfactory, when 8½ per cent. are on the sick list, must be very easily satisfied

The admissions into hospital and deaths during last week were:—August 4, 28 admissions and 5 deaths; August 5, 16 admissions and 6 deaths; August 6, 27 admissions and 4 deaths; August 7, 14 admissions and 6 deaths; August 8, 17 admissions and 3 deaths; August 9, 16 admissions and 1 death; August 10, 25 admissions and 1 death. Total admissions, 153; total deaths, 26.

Brigadier-General Arbuthnot, who has been for some time unwell, has been invalided to England, and Brevet Major Gough, his Aide-de-Camp, has been granted leave of absence as a special case till October 13.

The 1st Brigade is temporarily broken up, and officers commanding report direct to head-quarters. Captain Hitchcock, Brigade-Major, is attached for duty to the brigade at El Wardan. Rev. H. M. Powell, M.A., Chaplain to the Forces, is appointed to El Wardan for duty.

Lieutenant B. Donne, of the Royal Sussex, has entered the Egyptian Army.

Captain J. D. M. Guthrie, Lieutenants F. A. Freeman and H. D. Fanshawe, 19th Hussars; and C. H. S. Vores, I Battery, 2nd Brigade, Royal Artillery, have passed in subjects a and b, sec. 4, par. 37, Queen's Regulations.

Surgeon-Major Ramsbotham has resumed medical charge of the Citadel, and Surgeon-Major McNamara of Helouan Hospital. Surgeon Wellings has proceeded to Suez, Surgeon Parke to Alexandria. Surgeon-Major Fergusson has assumed medical charge of Staff and Departments during the illness of Surgeon Dixon.

The following appeared in General Orders of the 7th inst.:—"The Lieutenant-General Commanding has to announce to the troops, with the deepest regret, the sad and sudden death of Superintending Sister Jones through an accident at Helouan, while in the immediate discharge of her duties. The Lieutenant-General cannot sufficiently express his sorrow at the death of this lady, who, during so many months past, has nursed the sick in our hospitals with such untiring devotion, and he feels sure that both officers and men will unite with him in deploring the great loss which the Army in Egypt has sustained." Sister Jones met her death in a carriage accident.

The cases of cholera are much less virulent in type, and the worst, we may hope, is over. In my next, I hope to be able to close the lugubrious list.

H.M.S. IRIS.

Mr. Gourley asked the Secretary to the Admiralty on Thursday whether the structural strength of the ocean cruiser in framing, main, and shell plating is more or less than that of vessels of similar kind, and classed 100 A1 in the merchant service—say, of the White Star Line; and whether it was correct that her coal endurance was only equal to seven days in ordinary weather, whereas the merchant ships of similar size and greater speed possessed a coal endurance of over 30 days, besides cargo. Sir T. Brassey stated, in reply, that it is important to explain that the displacement of the Iris is 3,700 tons, while that of the White Star Line is from 7,000 to 10,000 tons. Comparing the Iris with a merchant ship of the same size classed 100 A1 at Lloyd's, the thickness of the frames and plates is less, and the frames are further apart; but the system of construction is different throughout. The Iris is a double ship from the keel to the upper deck, heavily bulkheaded, and framed to suit these conditions. That the Iris is a strong ship was proved conclusively by the small damage sustained when ashore at Port Augusta. The Iris has a bunker capacity for 39 days at a full speed of 18 knots. Merchant steamers of similar speed, but twice the size, have coal capacity for seven to ten days. The long coal endurance referred to in the question is associated with much lower speed. Referring to Sir Thomas Brassey's Vol. II. of "The British Navy," we find at page 299 that the Iris stows 750 tons of coal, which will carry her 6,800 miles at the rate of 10 knots per hour, or sufficient to last her 28 days at that speed. Therefore, if the honourable gentleman's figures are correctly reported, there is a large difference between his official statement in Parliament and his published account of her performance.

In the letter which appeared last week, under the head of "The Late Chief Inspector of Lifeboats," it appeared that the writer thereof—Sir Edward Perrott, Bart.—had been "Chairman of the Institution" for the last thirty years. We are requested by that gentleman to state that he has been "Chairman of the Preparatory Committees" for that period, and not "Chairman of the Institution," as stated.

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

With the departure of the last battalion of Volunteers from the Camp to-day, the drill-season proper may be said to terminate, though a few field-days and minor operations may still take place before the commencement of field-firing instruction in the middle of September. The programme of work for the season 1883, drawn up by Sir Daniel Lysons in March last, in which it was hoped during the months of July and August to practise bivouacs, encampments, outpost duties, and entrenchments, and to send out a few flying columns of all arms, has been far from realised, and the drill season about to close has, generally speaking, been rather humdrum and uninteresting; in not a few instances, the "ideas" for the field-days and operations were a mere réchauffé of former work. There has certainly been nothing new attempted here during the summer months, if we may except the courses of musketry and military training, the results of which, up to the present time, have not been eminently satisfactory. During the week the weather has been excessively hot, and General officers commanding brigades and officers commanding separate corps were ordered to make arrangements to confine parades and field-days to the early morning and evening. On Monday, minor operations were carried out at an early hour by the 1st Brigade (three battalions), the 2nd Dragoon Guards, and P Battery, 4th Brigade, R.A., in the direction of the Long Valley and the North Horns, under the orders of Major-General Walker. The General commanding the Division was present during the manœuvres, accompanied by the Head-quarter Staff. It is clearly laid down in the instructions for the guidance of those conducting minor operations that they should be carried out with method and precision, and in conformity with the details of the drill learnt on the barrack-square, of which they are the application to ground; and that previous to their commencement, the object of the manœuvre should be fully explained to the men, in order that they may take an intelligent interest in the ensuing operations. Notwithstanding all this, I could not learn that the least attempt had been made to explain anything to the men forming the opposing forces in this case; nor could I, after inquiry, find any non-commissioned officer or man who had the slightest conception of the "idea" of the work in which he had been engaged, or the purport of any of those movements in which he was officially supposed to take an "intelligent interest."

The 5th Provisional Battalion of Rifle Volunteers will return to their homes to-day, by three special trains from Farnborough and North Camp stations, after an excellent week's work. This fine battalion of Volunteers was attached to the Duke of Connaught's brigade, and during the week had much hard work. On Monday, instruction in camp duties, &c., and steady company and battalion drill; Tuesday, drill and instruction in attack and defence of tactical points, conduct of advanced and rear-guards, and skirmishing, under battalion commanders; Wednesday, drill in brigade, under the Duke of Connaught; Thursday, brigade field operations; and on Friday, the battalion took part in a Divisional sham-fight of all arms.

Yesterday (Friday), the whole of the troops composing the Division paraded at an early hour, and were exercised as opposing forces. The idea was that a Northern force marching from Ash Vale through the South Camp, and over Norris Bridge, in the direction of Hartford Bridge flats, is attacked by a Southern force advancing from Farnham over the Bricksbury Hill range. The Northern force was supposed to be accompanied by trains which took half-an-hour to pass any one point, and the object of the General commanding that force was to keep the enemy in check, until he could pass his trains over Norris Bridge. The Northern force was disposed in column of route along the road running east and west through the South Camp, north of A lines, with the head of the column on the Farnham-Farnborough Road. The Southern force was in column of route from Farnham to Lawday House. The Northern force, in drill order, was under the command of the Duke of Connaught; and the Southern force under the command of Sir F. FitzWygram. Umpires:—Northern force—Major-General M. Walker; Lieutenant-Colonel M. H. Hale, 26th; Major Beck, 15th Hussars; Major Le Mottée, R.A.; Captain Josselyn, R.H.A.; Captain Lambert, Queen's Bays; Captain Deverell, 31st. Southern force—Major-General F. A. Willis; Major Ashburner, Queen's Bays; Major Curteis, R.A.; Major Bromhead, 84th; Major Harmar, 31st; Captain Allfrey, 15th Hussars; Captain Tillotson, R.A. Lieutenant Dawson, Coldstream Guards, attached to Sir Archibald Alison's personal Staff.

Captain Thomson, 7th Hussars, took up the duties of Brigade-Major of Cavalry at Aldershot on the 21st inst., vice Lieutenant-Colonel Barrow, C.M.G., struck off the strength of the Division from the 20th inst.

Gunner Marshall, R.A., who was severely injured at the field-day last week, is progressing favourably, though his sight has been injured, and it was found necessary to amputate several of his fingers. It is probable that this accident would not have occurred had the Umpire rules been strictly observed, wherein it is laid down that, "No troops are to approach within one hundred yards of an opposing force in the open, and no firing is to be allowed under any circumstances at a less distance." This necessary rule has been repeatedly broken at recent field-days, and when the opposing forces get too close to each other the men become much excited. It has been found necessary to publish the following in Divisional Orders, as a modification of the Umpire Rules to be temporarily acted upon:—"When Cavalry approach Cavalry, Artillery, or Infantry, they will pull up into a walk on arriving within 200 yards of the opposing force, and on reaching 100 yards distance they will halt, and wait until it is decided which is to fall back."

A Court of Inquiry assembled in the Quartermaster's stores of the 84th Regiment on Thursday, to inspect and report upon certain arms in possession of the regiment, in accordance with instructions which were received. The proceedings were forwarded to the Senior Ordnance Store Officer.

The following officers have been ordered to report themselves on the 1st prox., for a four months' course of garrison instruction:—Lieutenants Preston and Turner, 2nd Dragoon Guards; Captain Alexander and Lieutenants Long and Patton-Bethune, 3rd Hussars; Lieutenants Douglas and Wood, 26th Cameronians; Captains Beatty, Piercy, and Malet, 39th; Lieutenants Dawkins and Wilbraham, 85th L.I.; Lieutenant McGrigor, 3rd Rifle Brigade; Lieutenants Kincaid and the Hon. E. Stopford, 87th; Captain and D.A.C.G. Price, Commissariat and Transport Staff; Lieutenant Egerton, 72nd Highlanders; Captain Kelly, 35th; Lieutenants Loscombe and Bourke, 1st West India Regiment.

The 87th Regiment will embark for India early next month. About 400 men of this regiment will remain at Aldershot, and join the 89th on its arrival in England. The 84th Regiment is held in readiness to embark for Bermuda at an early date. Drafts, consisting of three officers and 260 men of the 31st, and four officers and 380 men of the 2nd Battalion 18th, are held in readiness to proceed to India next month.

Deputy-Commissary-General H. A. Russell, C.B., having returned from special duty in Egypt, has rejoined the command, and assumed the duties of Senior Ordnance Store Officer, from the 19th inst.

Captain J. W. Hawkins, R.A., who has been for some time specially employed at the Camp in superintending the trials of the 7-pounder mountain guns, has been struck off the strength of the Division, the experiments having been brought to a conclusion for the present, the guns handed over to the Ordnance Store Department, and the mules returned to the Army Service Corps. The guns passed satisfactorily through the severe trials of the past few weeks, but it was clearly demonstrated that the carriages are not sufficiently strong, for these and the elevating gear sustained considerable injury during the firing last week of the 300 rounds of plugged shell. It is understood that further trials will be made when these guns have been provided with heavier carriages.

Surgeons-Major Cuffe and Ruttledge, and Surgeons Nealon, Wight, Waghorn, and Owen, are in readiness for service abroad.

Sir F. FitzWygram proceeded on Tuesday to Shorncliffe, to inspect the 7th Dragoon Guards.

It has been notified that the regulated travelling allowance is admissible for officers proceeding with troops on the march, irrespective of the billet money, which is paid to the innkeeper, and not to the officer.

A general court-martial, of which Colonel Dixon, 39th Regiment, was president, assembled at the general court-martial room, South Camp, on Thursday last, for the trial of Gunner W. Jones, R.A., for fraudulent enlistment, &c. Colonel Clifford Parsons officiated as Deputy-Judge-Advocate.

It has been notified that warrant officers and staff serjeants are not permitted to wear badges on the forage caps with the gold-embroidered peak, except in those cases in which the forage cap is supplied from the Royal Army Clothing Depôt, Pimlico, with a badge thereon.

The military tournament to be held at Bagshot Park on August 29, in aid of the building fund of the Bagshot Church, promises to be very interesting, and we hope it will be successful as regards the pecuniary and other results. The arrangements will be under the control of a a committee of officers from Aldershot, and a local committee. The gates of the park will be opened at 11 o'clock, and a series of athletic and military sports and competitions, including wrestling, boxing, quarterstaff, bouts with rapier and dagger, and fencing, feats of swordsmanship, singlestick, bayonet versus bayonet, sword versus sword (mounted), lemon-cutting, tent-pegging, tilting at the ring, cleaving the Turk's head, and wrestling on horse-back, will commence at 12. Most of these competitions will be open to both Regulars and Auxiliaries, with a special series of prizes for each. A detachment of non-commissioned officers and men of the 1st Life Guards will perform the musical ride. The Queen's Bays from Aldershot will also send a musical ride, and two rides will be shown in one tournament. Military bands will be in attendance. There will be 1st and 2nd-class refreshment tents on the ground, and special arrangements will be made by the railway authorities for visitors. For further particulars, our readers will refer to our advertising columns.

"THE HIGHLAND BONNET."

SIR,—I see that another attempt has been made to introduce a new regimental Highland bonnet, and that some men were lately "told off" and appeared before her Majesty with the new head-gear at Osborne. As I, together with others interested in this matter, met with no little trouble some time back, perhaps I may be allowed to make one or two observations touching the new head-dress. If a new bonnet must be adopted, let it be correct and historic. Such a bonnet can be found in copying the blue bonnet worn by the "Fencible Regiment," formed in Sutherland during the Rebellion days, or a little later. It is absurd to reject this bonnet because it is not stiff enough, "uniform" enough. The days are come, surely, when the comfort of the men may be taken into consideration. Comfort is assured with this bonnet. It gives shade, and by its texture absorbs mixture. It is picturesque and smart. The model is now in the hands of the MacIntosh of MacIntosh, Moy Hall, Inverness. At the time we submitted this bonnet for her Majesty's approval, there appeared no immediate reason why her Majesty should be asked to decide. That time has apparently come, and I venture again to draw attention to this head-gear. Messrs. Meyer and Mortimer, 36 Conduit Street, had our model, and could reproduce it. The "hackle" can be put on when wanted, or discarded. I believe at the late Volunteer Review held at Edinburgh, the Sutherland men were second to none, and their officers wore and wear a bonnet somewhat like the one submitted to the Queen not long ago. The bonnet is cocked or turned up on the left side, and preserves all the uniformity needed. The broad band round the bonnet, of red-and-white "chequer," is retained.—I am, &c.,

COMMANDER BEST AND THE CLYDE COURT-MARTIAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In common with, I believe, the vast majority of the service, I am happy to see, by this morning's papers, that the case of Mr. Maxwell-Heron, lately commanding H.M.S. Clyde, is to be submitted to the Law Officers of the Crown. At the same time, I observe in the report of the debate in the House of Commons which elicited this statement from the Premier, that Capt. H. Maxwell and Col. Alexander, speaking in their places, imputed most disgraceful conduct to an officer who was on the court of inquiry, which, as is frequently the case, precedes the court-martial. This officer is, of course, precluded, unless he has some friend, an M.P., who possesses the ear of the House, from any reply, and at this late time of the Session will probably have no chance of making any, even if he deems it necessary; but surely it was the duty of the official representative of the Admiralty in the Commons to say more than he did on the occasion? Does he, or any one, who is or ought to be, conversant with the feelings actuating officers in the service, suppose for one instant that the officer alluded to would have allowed personal feelings to sway him in the matter of a report to the L.C.A., vitally affecting the honour of a brother-officer? Great latitude must doubtless be allowed to Capt. Maxwell, speaking as he did with a matter so deeply affecting his family depending on the issue; but no such excuse appears for Col. Alexander, who seems indeed to have emulated the behaviour of a certain M.P., who lately was taken to task by the Irish Secretary for abusing the privilege of Parliament in vilifying those who could not reply. As these remarks are addressed through you to a service audience, who are, however, certain to be regarded in their own circles as referees in the matter, I need hardly point out that, distasteful as such a duty must have been to the officer in question, he had no choice but to obey his orders and do his duty to the best of his power. In conclusion, I wish to add I have never seen the officer in question, to the best of my belief; but if he or any other officer on the occasion of strong personal attacks in Parliament on matters connected with their duty are not to look for protection to the Admiralty as represented in the House, to whom shall they appeal?—I am, &c.,

DR. THORBURN'S CASE.

SIR,—Com. Maxwell-Heron has succeeded through his friends in getting the sentence passed upon him by a court-martial made the subject of reconsideration, the Prime Minister allowing that, at any rate, the "essence of a case" had been made out, and being prepared to direct that the Law officers shall assist the Admiralty in reviewing the case. Mr. Gladstone's sense of fair-play, and his tacit admission of a possible miscarriage of justice, will cheer the hearts of both services, and it is to be hoped that this case will lead to improvement in the dispensing of justice in both services. If the case of Dr. Thorburn could be placed before him, and if he were informed that this officer, having been accused of a petty theft, was acquitted of the charge by a court of inquiry, that he was, nevertheless, compulsorily removed from the Army without trial by court-martial, the Commander-in-Chief in India stating that there was not sufficient evidence to lay before a court-martial, the Prime Minister would doubtless allow that there was something more than "the essence of a case" for Dr. Thorburn. What will be thought when these two cases are compared? A case is to be reopened for a Naval officer on the order of the Government, after sentence by court-martial, while the case of a Military officer is not to be reopened after acquittal by the court of officers who inquired into the case. Is there not a danger of the conclusion being drawn that friends at court and importunity succeed where a good case fails?—I am, &c.,

DESERTION.

SIR,—Presumably the author of a letter published by you last week on the above subject possesses but slight knowledge of the real character of the men who compose the rank and file of the British Army. He appears to know something of the real grievances under which they labour, but fails to propose any tangible remedies for their amelioration. He desires to fill the ranks with a superior class of recruits, and with this object makes rash and most exaggerated charges against the character of those who at present fill our ranks. Without entering into any controversy regarding the effectiveness or non-effectiveness of our present recruiting system, I may safely state that keen and critical observation will prove that the majority of those enlisted are not the debauched, sodden, illiterate wretches "S. P. H. S." would have us believe, but are rather composed for the most part of the average specimen of the British workman, with a considerable mixture of the middle class, such as farmers' sons and tradesmen's assistants, and in many instances men of taste and culture, who have, through force of circumstances not necessarily criminal, but often proceeding from a passionate, excitable, or adventurous disposition, resorted to enlistment with the laudable ambition of recouping their fallen fortunes and repairing the errors of the past. It is a gross, though popular delusion, as well as a libel on the Army at large, to imagine that in every soldier's history there is a faux pas which indelibly stains his character. "S. P. H. S." cannot have given this matter the consideration it deserves, or the conclusions he draws would not be so ill-judged. It would be folly to deny that in our ranks many of the criminal class may be found, men who not only owing to their vicious habits are compelled to fly to the Army as a dernier ressort; but this, under our present system, it is almost impossible to remedy, and the fact should not reflect on the character of the Army at large. Again, it cannot be denied that the standard of morality in the Army is not as high as its well-wishers would desire. Nevertheless, from considerable experience, I am persuaded that it will bear favourable comparison with that maintained by average civilians. In making comparisons it must be borne in mind that our position as public servants, our glaring uniform, and the massing of numbers in particular localities, all aid in bringing our failings more prominently before the public. Perhaps, fifty years ago, when the private soldier was regarded by the respectable public as a thing unclean, "S. P. H. S.'s" remarks might have passed unchallenged, but in this age of enlightenment when, whatever a man's position, the vox populi proclaims him "a man for a' that," it is too much to believe that his darkly-coloured picture of a soldier's character will be read with credulity. In conclusion, I would ask "S. P. H. S." to believe that although often looked upon as a necessary evil, the private soldier possesses neither more nor less of the virtues and vices which adorn and afflict mankind, than his brethren of the "Straw-hat Corps."—I am, &c.,

The Edinburgh, 6, double-screw steel armour-plated turret ship, was to have commenced her steam trials on Monday, but during a preliminary trial on Friday afternoon the crown-wheel of her steam capstan, which is worked by one of the auxiliary engines of the ship, broke, owing, it is believed, to the springing of the deck, and the trials have been postponed until another wheel is furnished by the contractors, Messrs. Harfield and Co.

THE PAY DEPARTMENT IN INDIA.

SIR,—It was recently stated in your columns that the question of pay to paymasters serving in India, who have the honorary rank of major, was under the consideration of the authorities. At present, a paymaster with that rank is the only officer in the country who does not benefit by his promotion. He draws 506 rs., and an infantry major 640 rs., a month; in other words, considering the rupee worth about 1s. 8d., the former is in receipt of about £11 (134 rs.) a month less than the combatant major, whereas at home stations a paymaster of the same standing draws £6 a month more pay than the infantry major, and higher allowances. Calculating the rupee at 1s. 7½d. and the dollar at 3s. 9d., the consolidated pay and allowances of a paymaster (major) stationed at Hong Kong is £707; in Ceylon, £606; in India, £494; and at home about £433 per annum. Fancy an officer receiving only £61 a year more in India than at home! At present, there are about a dozen officers, averaging 20 years' total service, only drawing the above meagre income, and this number will be shortly doubled, as a similar number of paymasters proceed to India during the forthcoming trooping season to relieve staff paymasters ordered home. Surely, when the matter is looked into, there can be no hesitation on the part of the India Office, if the decision rests with them, in according to the officers of the Pay Department the pay and allowances they are justly entitled to according to their rank and service, as compared with other departmental officers in that country.—I am, &c.,

The English Volunteers who have attended the Tir National at Brussels have occupied themselves principally with the amusements of the capital, and many of them have returned to London without firing a shot. The Minister of the Interior gave a soirée at the hotel of his ministry on Thursday night, to which Col. Scrivener, Capt. Probyn, and other volunteer officers, received invitations. The result of Thursday's shooting was to place the best carton for the "Bogiers" prize to the credit of Gavrie, of the London Scottish. Lowe, of the Queen's Westminster, had a central carton, and at 250 yards made 23 points out of a possible 25.—The Globe.

Army & Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 25, 1883.

IN November, 1881, a Committee was appointed by the Secretary of State for War "to inquire into" the Royal Hospitals of Chelsea and Kilmainham, the Royal Military Asylum, and the Royal Hibernian Military School, with reference to proposed extensive modifications in the constitution and working of those institutions. The Report of the Committee is dated November 20, 1882, but it has only lately been laid before Parliament, in consequence, we presume, of questions having been asked about it. Not only has this report on important and interesting subjects been thus withheld for nearly a year, but it has been issued without the evidence given before the Committee, and without the Appendix to which frequent reference is made. The subjects which the Committee were instructed to consider were:—(1) The expediency of abolishing "the system of in-pensioners;" (2) certain changes in the composition and functions of the Chelsea Board of Commissioners; (3) alterations in the discipline and management of the two Military Schools; (4) the abolition of the Normal School for Training Army Schoolmasters; and (5) the effects of the extension of elementary education and the adoption of the short-service system on the education of soldiers in Regimental Schools. The recommendations of the Committee may be thus very briefly summarised. 1. "The pension business" to be transferred to the War Office. 2. The Chelsea Board to retain its name, but to be altered in composition and divested of all independent authority and of its most important functions. 3. Chelsea and Kilmainham to be maintained, "at least for the present," as in-pension establishments. 4. An alteration in the way in which the revenues of the two hospitals are shown in the Army Estimates. 5. The surgeons, chaplains, and quartermasters, whose duties seem best suited to retired officers, to be taken from the active list. 6. A great number of alterations in the details of both Schools. 7. The Normal School for Schoolmasters to be abolished. 8. A number of minor appointments to be discontinued. No advantage is set forth as likely to be gained by the transfer of documents from Chelsea to the War Office and the Record Office, except their concentration under the control of the Secretary for War. At Chelsea, there is ample space for their safe custody and classification, which it would be difficult to find at the War Office, where it is proposed to keep all documents not more than twenty years old. The Committee admit that the system of keeping documents at Chelsea is simply perfect. It is further admitted that the Chelsea Board, as now constituted, has the entire confidence of the soldiers, and for this reason, we presume, the Committee propose to retain the old name, while transferring most of its jurisdiction to the Secretary for War. Unless some very decided steps are soon taken to make the Army less unpopular, the question of the retention of "in-pension" establishments will be settled negatively. If short-service soldiers cannot be induced to re-engage, pensioners will disappear, as their old regiments have done. An advantage claimed for the proposed transfer of the control over the awarding of pensions in certain cases from the Chelsea Board to the Secretary for War is that it would prevent differences between those authorities. But as we are told that there have been only four distinct cases in the last twelve years in which the Board has been in conflict with the Secretary of State for War, while many thousands of cases have been decided annually, this advantage is almost infinitesimal. Indeed the unanimity is quite surprising, and in marked contrast with the transactions in which the War Office has been engaged with other authorities. We cannot doubt that if the evidence were in favour of the changes proposed, or even if it were not decidedly adverse, it would have been printed with the Report, and as some copies have been produced, we run no risk in asserting that it was adverse. There are several points that cannot be fairly considered till the publication of the evidence and the appendix, for which we look anxiously.

The case of Private Kimber, of the 4th Hussars, affords an illustration of the danger of giving circulation—particularly the largest in the world—to stories without due examination, when they reflect on the conduct of members of honourable professions. But we hope, without prejudging the result, that the inquiry at Hounslow will cause editors of newspapers to take a little heed of their ways, before they commit to type the accusations of men who, under the influence of passion or spite, bring grave charges against those who ought to be considered primâ facie entitled to fair treatment. The spectator who saw Private Kimber chucked into the water was, no doubt, scandalised at such a proceeding, and we need not say it was one which could not be approved of; but the charges brought by the man himself—that he was thrown into the Thames, in the presence of Captain Ramsay and the Serjeant-Major, and that the men would not have dared to do it without orders—were made under very different circumstances.

There is an old story about a fighting Bishop whose belligerent propensities gave rise to a discussion as to the possibility of separating his episcopal and his military functions, should his career be determined by a knock on the head in the battle-field. "If the soldier were condemned to perdition, what would become of the priest?" An analogous question, it appears, crops up with regard to the Rev. Mr. Shaw, anent whose imprisonment in a French man-of-war there has been a good deal of indignation expressed in this country; but if it be true that he was an official, indeed a dignitary of the Hova Government, it was certainly unwise for Mr. Shaw to trust himself within the line of French operations, and to give comfort, as a missionary, to the Hovas, with whom France was at war.

The Council of State instituted in Egypt must cause some surprise to those who think that Egypt is about to be governed by a Military Commission. It is to be presided over by the Prime Minister, now Cherif Pasha, and is to consist of under-secretaries of eight Ministries, three Crown lawyers, four Commissioners of the Public Debt, the senior administrators of the Railways, the Domains, and the Dairas, and will be composed of four Egyptians, four Frenchmen, three Englishmen, three Austrians, two Italians, and two Egyptians of Armenian faith and descent. It is understood that Sir Evelyn Wood has expressed his opinion that the Egyptian Army will be quite competent to preserve order in Egypt by next October; but he does not, of course, pretend to say that, for political or other reasons, it may not be expedient to maintain an army of occupation there a little longer. There appears to be a kind of muddle-headed notion, perhaps founded on the ingenious statements in the newspapers as to the all-pervading activity of our Army in that country, that they have not only been looking after the reorganisation of Egypt, but that they have been engaged in the work of sanitary development; but they have, in fact, been solely occupied in the care of their own health, and we would that the efforts had been more successful. The cordons which were established had the effect of assuring people's minds, at all events, if they did not quite save their bodies; but the arduous duties connected with the establishment of them were carried out altogether by the Gendarmerie and police organised by Baker Pasha, and under his officers.

Sir Archibald Alison appears to be opening his command at Aldershot con spirito. Another sham-fight yesterday, between our old friends of the Northern and Southern armies,—a drawn battle, we hear.

An evening contemporary last Thursday quoted a statement from the Manchester Guardian with reference to the regimental-plate question, which we noticed some weeks ago, and on which we offered some observations in our last number. If our contemporary had looked to the proper quarter, he might have had earlier and more accurate information upon the matter. As far as we know, but two corps resorted to the step which called down upon them the dire displeasure of the Adjutant-General's Department, and the unfavourable view of the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief.

The long agony of the Count of Chambord is over, and the last hope of those who believe that the salvation of France lies in the hoisting of the white flag and the fleur-de-lis has died with him. In the French Navy, the news will be felt with deep regret, for the men of the sea, though fighting gallantly under the tricolor, have strong Legitimist tendencies.

There can be no question of the serious character of the article in the Nord Deutsche Zeitung. There are rumours of treaties and alliances going abroad which render the language of the organ of the German Foreign Office more significant. But we must wait a little, to see what is the real purport of it. Although it is probable that Prince Bismarck did not dictate the article, and although it is possible he may never have seen it till the paper was laid before him, it is quite certain no editor would have dared to have allowed it to appear, as no one on the staff would have ventured to have written any article of the sort, unless it was well understood that the production would not be viewed with disfavour at the Foreign Office.

The autumn manœuvres, which will attract so many Princes and great persons this year to places not unfamiliar in times gone by with the sounds of battle, possess a deep significance, in the fact that they may be but preparatory to campaigns such as the world has never yet seen since Napoleon traversed Europe from Boulogne to Moscow.

The news of the repulse of the French in the attack on Phukai does not, we fear, increase the chances of peace. And we doubt very much whether the admonitions of the leading journal and the other organs which counsel our neighbours, while smarting under this defeat, to consider well what they are doing, will tend to moderate their anger, or to make them sensibly relax their efforts. We are not aware of the circumstances under which the French Commander thought it necessary to direct an attack at the very time when the country was flooded by heavy rains; and it is not easy to understand, from the published accounts, how it was that the enemy were enabled to attack the retreating columns on the flank, when we read that in the advance "it was found impossible for the French to advance even along the roads without great difficulty, the country being under water on either side." The plan of the advance appears to have been vitiated by that mania, which of late years has led to more than one disaster among ourselves, of moving in several columns, with considerable intervals between them. It is supposed to be more strategical. It may be that the country is of a character which gave a greater chance of success to the combined operations of four columns, instead of attacking in one. Had the whole of the force, instead of being divided, advanced along the river bank, as Colonel Revillon's party did, under the protection of the fire of their gunboats, it is scarcely probable that the Black Flags could have successfully resisted the assault, which, delivered by a comparatively small body, was repulsed after three desperate assaults. In the narrative of the operations, it is not stated what became of one of the columns; but the centre, which seems to have moved parallel with the column to the right, by the river, halted at a certain point, to await the success of a turning movement which was to be effected by the column to the left, which may probably have consisted of two bodies. Any way, the condition of the roads impeded the advance; and the description of the difficulties encountered by this column causes us to admire the determination and gallantry displayed by the French. The horses refused to draw the guns, and the men had to drag them through the mud. The French were assailed by a tremendous fusillade from the Chinese and Annamites, who were armed with Remington's breech-loaders, and were strongly entrenched; and in the midst of the operations torrents of rain descended with tropical violence, and flooded the country; while the river rose so high that the enemy, who had swarmed out of their positions and followed the retreating French, were obliged to desist, and get under the cover of the works. The picture drawn of this flood is awful. The entire delta, in which the French are operating, is said to have been inundated, many villages destroyed, and thousands of lives lost.

There was once a machine in Europe which no one could find exactly, but it was supposed to exist somewhere or other, and all the States of the Old World were influenced in their policy by an intense anxiety to keep it in working order. Every great act of which a State was capable in peace or war was morally weighed in this ethical machine. It was called "The Balance of Power." No one pretends to believe in the potency of the instrument, but every one knows where it is—now. The balance of power is held in the iron hand of the Chancellor, at Kissingen, or wherever else Prince Bismarck may be.

When a Reuter, or other telegraphic agency, says, "It is reported," it may be assumed that what follows is not to be depended upon. So it turns out as to the story that the 41st Regiment has been ordered to invade Zululand from Natal.

It is rather hard on the French, and on us, that the Times could not find an English word to express its meaning when, on Thursday morning, it delivered a little lecture to these naughty people about the wickedness of their ways, and the folly of their little expeditions up and down the world, and had to advise them to "adopt a policy of reticence and recueillement." But reticent the Times admits the French Press to have been, and how Frenchmen are to "recueillir" themselves in their policy, our contemporary does not deign to explain.

Sir Evelyn Wood was expected in London last night, and his Aide-de-Camp, Captain Stuart Wortley, 60th Rifles, came up to London on Thursday, to await the arrival of the gallant General.

The Morning Advertiser of the 23rd, in an article headed "The Thin Red Line," describes, in very plain language, the state of utter inefficiency to which our Army is being reduced by reforms. "The thin red line" is indeed fast disappearing; it does not look much like "the Line" now, it may not long continue to be red, and then only the thinness will remain!

A "Captain of the Line," of 14 years' service, takes exception to the letter of "S. P. H. S." on desertion, which appeared in our issue of last week. We do not insert the Captain's letter, because it would probably evoke much controversy without tending to promote unanimity. In a matter of opinion such as the estimate of the social character of British soldiers, we must expect very wide divergences rather than any approach to agreement. Men are apt to judge from personal experience, modified unconsciously by their own natural dispositions. "S. P. H. S." may have been led, by a combination of unfortunate circumstances, to take the gloomiest views, while the Captain's experience must have been singularly happy, or his own disposition is uncommonly amiable. We publish in another column a letter on the same subject, signed "G. H. I.," because it is moderate in its tone and reasonable in its views; besides, written as it is by a private soldier, it does as much as one letter can do to remove the reproaches so often bestowed on his grade.

We doubt whether Lord Wolseley was not too sanguine in informing the Channel Tunnel Committee that we had artillery at home for two Army Corps. At a field-day recently at Aldershot, K Battery, 1st Brigade, R.A., turned out only 27 men, with two guns; and H and P Batteries, 4th Brigade, 90 men and three guns, and 78 men and four guns respectively.

The care which the Australian Colonists are displaying in rendering the great harbours of Melbourne and Sydney secure, contrasts with the apathy shown by the Home Government in respect to the protection of such commercial centres as Hong Kong and Port Louis, Mauritius—not a single armour-piercing gun is mounted at the first-named place, and two 7-inch guns suffice for Port Louis.

Brent, was at Monte Video on July 25, and was to leave that day for Porto Bello and Rio de Janeiro to meet successors, on Aug. 16, Rifleman and Wrangler, to join her at Rio, returning to Monte Video about Oct. 1. The Rambler was at Colonia on July 8, and would assist in surveying French Bank, Rio de la Plata, and afterwards proceed to Rio de Janeiro. Flirt, Com. Hammick, was at Cape Coast Castle on July 26.

Frolic, Com. A. Moore, which was commissioned for service on the Cape of Good Hope and West Coat of Africa station, was unable to leave Sheerness on Tuesday, owing to the discovery of some leaks in her keel. Malabar, Capt. H. Hand. Rear-Admiral Sir Francis Sullivan, Director of Transports at the Admiralty, arrived at Portsmouth on Tuesday last, and inspected the arrangements for lighting the Malabar with the electric light. The system adopted is the Edison incandescent. The two dynamo machines, which are of the L type, are driven by two, 20-horse-power, Brotherhood, three-cylinder engines, working up to a maximum speed of 550 revolutions. There are in all 395 lights, including 16 of 32-candle power, 115 of 16 candle power, and 264 of 8-candle power. The grand saloon is lighted by 25 pilaster lights on the bulkheads and 28 overhead lamps on the saloon deck. Powerful reflectors are also affixed to the yard-arms, which will prove of great service in embarking and disembarking troops at night. The total illuminating power on board is equal to 4,464 candles. It is probable that the other four Indian troopships will be lighted by means of the same system, as the opportunity occurs.

Wye, Staff Com. Miller, was at Zante on Aug. 19, and reached Malta on Aug. 22, when she was placed in quarantine for ten days.

THE NAVY IN PARLIAMENT.

The State of our Defences.—On Monday the affairs of the Navy were again brought before the public, by Admiral Sir John Hay calling attention to certain paragraphs in the evidence before the Channel Tunnel Committee concerning the defencelessness of the country, more especially as regards the insufficiency of the number of ironclad ships and guns, quoting the opinions of Lord Wolseley, Admiral Rice, and the First Lord of the Admiralty in the late Government, who admitted that we had not enough ironclads. Those being built were insufficient to compete with the 19 ironclads which France was completing, and the fact of 8,000 workmen being employed in French dockyards was a subject sufficient to attract our attention. Sir E. Reed concurred generally with the views of the right hon. baronet, and the country was indebted to him for bringing forward the question, with his knowledge, experience, and fair-mindedness. He (Sir E. Reed) was pained at the couleur de rose statement of the Member for Hastings (Sir T. Brassey) as to the strength of the Navy. The House ought to take the matter into consideration, and a Select Committee should be appointed next year, to inquire into the strength and condition of the Navy. Sir G. Balfour and Sir H. Holland condemned the system of the Minister for War being responsible for Naval guns. The latter gentlemen considered that a Select Committee on Naval affairs would be injudicious, as the evidence would be published, while with a Royal Commission it would be confidential. The Secretary of the Admiralty was glad to hear the remarks, though he could add nothing to what had been said. It was only natural that the witnesses on the Channel Tunnel Committee should accentuate the defenceless condition of the country as regarded by them; but there were equally eminent persons who held different views, and it must not be supposed that Lord Wolseley's opinions settled the matter. He objected to a Select Committee, but the Admiralty would not be hostile to the House adopting the means it thought best to obtain information as to the national requirements, and the manner of meeting them. Mr. O'Kelly complained that only £812 out of the Navy Estimates were spent in Ireland, and asked that the Belfast shipbuilding industry should be encouraged, and a Government shipbuilding yard established at Queenstown. The Secretary of the Admiralty informed him that consideration would be accorded shipbuilders in Ireland, if they could do Government work, the same as other private firms. The dockyard at Haulbowline was progressing; while Scotland, with many admirable situations, had no such establishment.

The Clyde Court-Martial.—When the vote of £10,400, for expenses of courts-martial, &c., was brought on, Capt. Heron Maxwell called attention to the court-martial held at the end of last year on the Commander of the Clyde. It was a difficult and delicate question to approach, in consequence of the relationship existing between himself and the officer who was tried. While in no way impugning the conduct of Lord Northbrook in connection with the inquiry, he contended that his lordship had committed an error of judgment. He reviewed the whole of the evidence, remarking on the character of the principal witness, Fitz-Gerald, the gunner, whose statements were prejudiced, interested, and in one instance, perjured, and endeavoured to shield himself by trying to incriminate his superior officer, yet the evidence of this warrant officer was the principal means for convicting the commander. Sir John Hay, while recognising the fact that the House of Commons was not a court of appeal from a court-martial, he thought it right that, when those in authority for dealing with courts-martial had not taken the course which the House expected, an opportunity should be given of laying before them and the public any circumstances which required attention. Com. Heron had served under his command, and had always given every satisfaction, both professionally and socially, and his career as a Naval officer had been marked with success up to the time of the unfortunate occurrences in the Clyde. While admitting that there was a certain amount of laxity on the part of Com. Heron, he would not believe him guilty of dishonesty, and attributed any slackness of his to impaired health, occasioned by changes from hot to cold climates, such as Aberdeen. He condemned the constitution of the court-martial, not on account of the officers composing it, who were all men of unquestionable honour, but he objected to the small number, five, when two others, Capts. Codrington and Gordon, were actually at Portsmouth, though stated to be on leave. He found fault with the Admiralty for refusing to submit the proceedings to their counsel, and the gentleman doing that duty expressed surprise at the omission. He read the opinion of Mr. Kekewich, Q.C. (already given in a previous issue of the Army and Navy Gazette), and considered that Com. Heron had been made a scapegoat, and it would be discreditable if another inquiry were not afforded him, to clear up the charges. Col. Alexander condemned the system of placing the commander at the mercy of such a man as Fitzgerald, who was allowed to excuse himself at the expense of his superior. A stop should be put to men making charges direct to those in high command, without going through their immediate superior. The main charges of fraud and making-away with stores entirely failed, and on them Com. Heron was acquitted; therefore, the prosecution having failed in them, the others ought to have been withdrawn. The whole evidence was tainted, and ought, therefore, to have been corroborated. He appealed to the Secretary of the Admiralty not to stick to the old rule of being unable "to upset the decision of a court-martial," and that an opportunity be given to Com. Heron of proving that he had not discredited an honourable and noble profession. The Secretary of the Admiralty appealed to the House to approach the subject with as little heat as possible, after the excited speeches they had just heard. He sympathised with the motives which induced his honourable friend to bring the matter before the House. The House had not before it the material on which to form a judgment, neither was it a Court of review. There was no reason to complain of the constitution of the court-martial, as Com. Heron could have been tried by one composed of a captain, two commanders, and two lieutenants. If the evidence was tainted, it ought to have been corroborated, and any doubt given in favour of the prisoner. He did not think the sentence a hard one. The proceedings were submitted to the Admiralty, who unanimously agreed on the sentence passed. With regard to a statement that the Court were not unanimous, every Member thereof was bound on oath not to divulge the opinion of any one forming the Court. Several other hon. Members spoke in favour of further inquiry being granted, and the Prime Minister stated that the Government were willing to submit it to the Law Officers of the Crown, at which Sir R. Cross expressed his satisfaction. The vote was subsequently agreed to, thus completing the Navy Estimates for the current financial year.

Experiments have just been conducted on board the Nettle, target-ship, in Portchester Creek, to determine the value of mantlets of rope and steel in affording protection to gunners on board ship against shell fire. The mantlets were suspended at various distances, in the midst of which a live shell was slung and fired by electricity. The effect of even the rope matting in diminishing the spread of the fragments was considerable. Mantlets made of steel will be fitted between the guns on board the Camperdown.

The Myrmidon, 4, which is being brought forward for commission at Sheerness Dockyard, was found to be in a very dilapidated condition, the timbers abaft her engine-room being completely rotten. The Myrmidon was built 17 years ago at Chatham, and has had three commissions. Her refit is estimated to cost over £20,000.

SPECTACLES v. BLINDNESS.—"One fourth of those suffering from dimness of sight or blindness can trace their calamity to the use of Spectacles indiscriminately purchased and unsuited to the sight. Reviews.

The Land of Fetish. By A. B. Ellis. (Chapman and Hall.)

The author of this volume, who holds a Captain's commission in the 1st West India Regiment, has evidently seen a great deal of the land of Fetish, and describes what he did see with spirit and humour. On almost all matters, whether serious or amusing, he writes pleasantly. His first visit to the Gambia took place in March, 1877, from Sierra Leone. He does not speak very favourably of Bathurst or its people, in fact he seems to have been thoroughly uncomfortable when there. The natives of the north side of the Gambia appear to be an entirely distinct race of negroes, and the only really black people to be found in West Africa. The author gives a lively description of the novel advertisements he found extensively posted in one of the streets at Bathurst. Gambia, we are told, boasts of a local corps of Militia. It is not often called out, principally because there is no particular uniform for it, no officers except two unmilitary colonial officials, and no arms except old trade muskets for the men. As a rule, the Africans cannot be made to shoot straight. The West India Regiments are very different, and the negroes of that country are as good marksmen as the British recruit. As to the field for sport afforded by Gambia, it is sufficient to say that elephants abound above the Falls of Barraconda, that the river is full of hippopotami and crocodiles; while leopards, hyænas, antelopes, and civet cats are easily found. Towards the end of 1879, the author visited Whydah, the seaport of Dahomey, on the Slave Coast. He thus describes the King :—"The King is the only absolute monarch known in West Africa, the power of all the other negro potentates being limited by the influence and authority of the principal chiefs and captains, as that of the King of Ashanti is limited to the Dukes of Ashanti ; but he of Dahomey knows no other law than that of his own sweet will." Fetishism in Dahomey is entirely different to fetishism on the Gold Coast, and more nearly approaches idolatry, as the unsubstantial shadows and apocryphal demons which are worshipped and dreaded by the Fantis and Ashantis are on the Slave Coast replaced by images and tangible objects. Amongst objects that are worshipped, a most important one is the Ocean, who has an extensive entourage. The King himself often descends to the beach to request the Sea to calm itself. Occasionally he sends his august friend the Ocean rich presents. However, the fetish most to be dreaded is "So," the god of thunder and lightning; then comes a minor fetish, Ho-ho, who protects twins. The fourth chapter of this very interesting book describes the Amazons, their trying drill, system of espionage, annual "customs," and human sacrifices. It is painful, and indeed disgusting, to read of the last ; but it is somewhat reassuring to hear that the practice of human sacrifices is gradually dying out at Dahomey, and that year by year the number of persons sacrificed becomes smaller and smaller. Captain Ellis does not confine his observations and descriptions to a mere recital of the customs and habits of the people of Dahomey and their King. He enters fully into the war question, tells how confusion began to reign in Coomassie, and how the struggle for supremacy between the Court and the war party was fast approaching a crisis, when the events which led to the sending of the golden axe to Cape Coast in January, 1881, occurred. Altogether, Captain Ellis's volume is full of interest, and will, no doubt, teach its readers many strange facts connected with "the Land of Fetish" which have hitherto been beyond their knowledge.

Civil Service Commission, August, 1883.

The annual Naval and Military Athletic Meeting at Portsmouth was resumed and concluded on Saturday, when the attendance was estimated at six thousand. Prince and Princess Edward of Saxe-Weimar were accompanied by a large and distinguished party, including the Dowager Marchioness of Ailesbury, the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry, the Marquis and Marchioness of Headfort and Lady Taylor, Lord and Lady Alexander Gordon Lennox, Lady Ponsonby, and the Misses Paget. Admiral Sir G. Phipps and Lady Hornby were also accompanied by a large number of friends. The grand stand was crowded, and the sports were watched with much interest. The band of the Royal Marine Light Infantry were in attendance, and when the donkey race came off played the "Forton Derby," an arrangement of a well-known air set by Herr Kreyer, the conductor. The officials were the same as on the previous day, and the success of the meeting not only is due to the whole of these in general, but more especially to Major Heathcote, the Superintendent of Gymnasia, who, assisted by Mr. Richards, the groundkeeper, was responsible for the general management of the meeting ; while Serjt.-Major Parker, one of the gymnasium instructors, undertook most of the preliminary work. Charming weather prevailed.

Cholera.—Appalling as are the reports from Egypt, how few think of our enormous annual sacrifice of valuable lives from scarlet fever, measles, and small-pox. All heads of families should insist upon the daily use, in bed-room, bath-room, and nursery, of Wright's Coal Tar Soap, the only true and simple preventive of infectious disease, and a certain cure of all disorders of the skin.

Amusements.

The Promenade Concert season at Covent Garden Theatre has so far proved unusually successful, the house being nightly crowded. The vocalists, especially Mr. Maas, whose fine voice always commands the greatest attention and admiration, add considerably to the attraction, and the skill of a numerous band is well displayed in the varied orchestral selections.

With this week has commenced the autumnal operatic season at the Crystal Palace, under the direction of Mr. Richard Temple and Mr. Faulkner Leigh, with Mr. Manns as conductor. "Maritana" was performed on Tuesday, and "Faust" on Thursday. On this day (Saturday), Rossini's opera of "The Barber of Seville" will be given in Italian, with Madame Rose Hersee as Rosina, Mr. Faulkner Leigh as Almaviva, and Mr. Walter Bolton as Figaro.

The Princess's has been reopened for the season, and crowded houses have eagerly welcomed the reproduction of that admirable romantic drama, "The Silver King," which commenced its brilliant career last November. Mr. Wilson Barrett and Miss Eastlake resume their highly effective impersonations, and the cast remains unchanged, with two unimportant exceptions. All fees for booking, programmes, cloak-room, and attendance are now very creditably abolished.

The Gaiety has presented the familiar farce of "High Life Below Stairs," in which Miss L. Harcourt and Mr. H. Monkhouse amusingly illustrate the affectations of Kitty and the Duke's servant. Sheridan's ever-diverting play of "The Critic," with Mr. W. Elton as Whiskerandos and Miss L. Harcourt as Tilburina, serves as a mirth-producing afterpiece. In both farce and play the performers take even more than the accustomed liberties with the text.

Messrs. George Conquest and Paul Meritt resumed their management of the Surrey Theatre on Monday night, commencing their new season with Mr. G. R. Sims's popular gipsy drama of "The Romany Rye," now transferred for the first time to the southern side of the Thames.

A new musical comedy, in three acts, called "A Bunch of Keys," will be produced at the Avenue Theatre this evening (Saturday), supported by Willie Edouin's American company.

The Lyceum will be reopened on Saturday next, Sept. 1, when Miss Mary Anderson will make her first appearance in England. Though only in her twenty-fourth year, having been born at Sacramento in 1859, the American actress has been for some time past a great favourite in the United States.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—HEALTH OR WEALTH.—No sane person would hesitate an instant in the choice between these two conditions. Now is the season to secure the former, either by restoring or confirming it. These Pills expel all impurities from the system which fogs, foul vapours, and variable temperatures engender during winter; this medicine also acts most wholesomely upon the skin, by disgorging the liver of its accumulated bile, and by exciting the kidneys to more energetic action; it increases the appetite for food, and strengthens the digestive process. The stomach and liver, with which most disorders originate, are fully under the control of these regenerative Pills, which act very kindly yet most efficiently on the tenderest bowels.

THIS Company has been formed for the purchase and working of an Iron Steamship called the "Turgot," built by the firm of Short Bros., Sunderland, and carrying about 1,650 tons. She has recently been put into first-rate condition, and is in every way a fine and strong ship, as the testimony of Mr. J. F. Flannery (a well-known engineer in the shipping trade) proves. She commenced work under the management of A. Lisner, Hooper, and Co., on April 14 last, and from the accounts, audited by Messrs. Kemp, Ford, and Co., it will be seen that she has earned a dividend for the first three months at the rate of 20½ per cent. per annum on the capital of the Company.

Trade during that time has been exceptionally quiet, and the Directors have no hesitation in saying that on the average for twelve months the steamer will earn at least a dividend of 25 per cent. The "Turgot" is already chartered for some months ahead, and it is calculated that these engagements will leave the Company a nett profit at the rate of 25 per cent. per annum. When these engagements are completed, she will take up a special trade of the Managers, consisting of the carriage of Beetroot Sugar from Danzig to London, which is probably more paying than any other trade.

It is intended that the profits shall be divided every three months, and the books of accounts relating to the Company will always be open to the inspection of Shareholders, and all accounts will be audited by the Company's Auditors.

The "Turgot" will be insured for her full value, and against the consequences of collision, whether steamer in fault or otherwise.

Steamers are now admitted to be among the most remunerative of reliable investments, when placed under good management; and the public have now the opportunity afforded them of participating in these profits with limited liability.

Application for Shares must be made on the accompanying form, and forwarded, together with a deposit of £1 per share, to the Bankers of the Company, the Imperial Bank, Limited, Lothbury, London.

In case fewer Shares are allotted than those applied for, the balance of the deposit will be held towards payment of the amount due on allotment, and in case the deposit exceeds the latter amount, it will be refunded.

All the preliminary expenses up to Allotment will be borne by the vendor. No charge will rest upon the Company for offices or clerks, but the Managers will receive 2½ per cent. of all freights earned by the "Turgot."

The only contract (excepting the above-mentioned charters) entered into prior to the issue of the Prospectus is one dated August 10, 1883, made between A. H. Lisner, of 7 Mincing Lane, London, of the one part, and James E. Scott, of 13 Rood Lane, London, on behalf of the Company, of the other part. Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained from the Solicitors and Bankers, and at the Offices of the Company, 7 Mincing Lane, London, where prints of the Memorandum and Articles of Association, and of the above-mentioned contract or agreement, can be seen, together with the report and accounts.

IN the Gazette of the 24th ult., the Cadets who have lately passed out of the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, were appointed to regiments. The total number of appointments is 88. Of these, 78 were to the Infantry, whilst only 10 were for the Cavalry. According to the August Army List, we find that there were about 120 Infantry, and 31 Cavalry vacancies. Thus it follows that, whereas 65 per cent. of the Infantry vacancies have been filled, only 32 per cent. of the vacant cavalry commissions are disposed of. Under the present system of first appointments, candidates for both Cavalry and Infantry enter the service together, undergo the same examination, and are allowed to elect for Cavalry or Infantry as they choose. The result is that by far the largest proportion join the Infantry, and Cavalry regiments are always in want of officers. This state of things has been in existence for several years, though partially checked by various expedients, and especially by Mr. Childers's reduction of the number of subalterns in 1881. But even with a reduced establishment the old deficiency of Cavalry subalterns is evidently reappearing. What is the reason to be assigned for the disfavour with which the mounted services are regarded? The answer is not far to seek. The root of this, as of most evils, is, we believe, that of money. No one would venture to affirm that, with Englishmen, possessed as they are of a natural love of horses, the Cavalry branch of the service is unpopular. But, on the other hand, it is well known that a young subaltern in a Cavalry regiment cannot expect to cut an even "decent," not to say "respectable," figure among his brother-officers, unless he is possessed of considerable private means. The exceedingly small number of Cadets who select the Cavalry shows one of two things,—either young men of wealthy families do not care to enter for the usual Army examinations, or else they have not sufficient ability, as a rule, to enable them to gain places high enough to entitle them to receive commissions. Whichever of these causes it is which prevents young men from joining the Cavalry, two alternative remedies would appear to suggest themselves. Either the War Office should insist, not in a half-hearted manner, but in a way that will be thoroughly understood, on the reduction of all unnecessary expenditure in Cavalry regiments,—such, for instance, as the maintenance of the regimental drag, the holding of regimental races, and a host of other expensive, pleasant, but uncalled-for luxuries, and so bring the Cavalry within the means of the majority of Army aspirants,—or else a separate examination should be instituted for those desirous of obtaining commissions in Cavalry regiments. The latter alternative is the simplest, and, to our mind, the best, for we venture to believe that the Army is as popular as ever amongst the scions of our county families, and that they could easily be made to pass through even a severer ordeal than an Army examination, if sufficient inducements could be held out to them to come forward. We can only attribute the disfavour with which the idea of a separate examination for the Cavalry has hitherto been regarded to the fact that it is too simple for the ingenious "permanent officials" at the War Office, who, among other plans for catching Military fish, have actually carried their ingenuity so far as to beseech unsuccessful candidates to accept commissions in the Cavalry. We are not aware whether the question of the filling-up of the large number of existing vacancies in the Cavalry is under consideration, but having regard to the desirability of our small Army being kept in as efficient a condition as possible, to compensate in some way for its paucity of numbers, we would impress upon the responsible authorities the desirability of steps being adopted with a view of getting over a difficulty which has existed for some years, and which ought to be removed, if only in justice to the general body of Cavalry officers, who must naturally be anxious to see their arm of the service occupying the position that it should do in the estimation of the public; and would do, were the ruling powers to exercise a little more discretion in the consideration of matters affecting its interests.

THERE has lately appeared in the columns of Engineering an article headed as above, the purport of which, as set forth in a foot-note, is "to expose certain weaknesses in the construction and management of our war-ships. Most of these weaknesses are well known to officers engaged on active service, but they appear, for the most part, to be ignored by our Admiralty authorities, notwithstanding their undoubted importance." The story may be divided into two distinct parts; first, an account of the actual engagement; and secondly, an able attack on our Naval constructive policy. The author is evidently a man who is or has been connected with the Navy, having a special knowledge of the latter part of his subject, but who has not brought the same clear and impartial judgment to bear on the first portion, and who seems to have but a poor opinion of the Executive Branch of the present day. Rumour has it that a late Chief Constructor of the Navy is the author. The story is based on the supposition that war is declared against us in May, 1886, by the French, Turks, and Russians; that we are supported by the Germans and Egyptians; that a general engagement takes place off Port Said between our Mediterranean Squadron and the French and Turkish Fleets in the following June; and that the object of the battle is to wrest the Suez Canal from our hands. Further, the ships of the opposing Fleets are treated as coinciding as nearly as possible with their probable state at that date. Without touching on the political aspect of the situation, we will proceed to examine the views of the author in the matter of a Naval engagement under such circumstances. In the commencement of the story, the disasters attendant on the attempt of the Channel Squadron to steam at full-speed from Plymouth to Malta is gone into at some length; but as four of the six ships composing this squadron can only be characterised as an ancient lot, it is hardly to be wondered at that the machinery of some of them should have broken down under this exceptional strain. There may be some truth in the remark that the engines of our war-ships are constructed too lightly, to save weight; but nothing is more calculated to wear out the boilers and engines of a ship than the continual wear and tear consequent on keeping station and exercising at fleet evolutions, which is actually more detrimental than constant steaming at a regular, though high rate of speed. The method of exercising the ships of a fleet at ramming tactics by means of moving-targets, such as boats under sail, running as they list before the wind, seems well worthy of consideration; though, of course, it is a very different matter attempting to ram such an object and carrying out the same manœuvre against a hostile ship, during the excitement of an action, for she can at the same time use her ram or torpedoes. If the general practice in time of peace with our torpedo-boats is carried out in the hap-hazard manner the author of this story would have us believe—which we can scarcely credit—then it is imperatively necessary for the Admiralty to institute strict inquiries into the matter, and severely take to task those Admirals and Captains who permit of such a disgraceful neglect of their duties. It stands to reason that no amount of practice with ships, guns, torpedo-boats, torpedoes, and such like material can be of any benefit, unless the practice be assimilated as closely as possible to what would occur in actual war. Coming to the story of the battle, we find that 15 English ironclads are supposed to be opposed to 12 French and seven Turkish ironclads, the English Fleet being formed into four subdivisions, with the leaders in line abreast and eight cables (1,920 yards) apart; while the enemy were formed in double line abreast, their ships being three cables apart. By adopting this formation, the enemy would seem to lose their numerical superiority, in that some of their ships would pass through the British line in the interval between each subdivision of the latter, without encountering an antagonist. The tactics adopted by the English Admiral have much to commend them, but we are of opinion that a more open formation of the ships of each subdivision would have been advisable, to preclude the possibility of a collision between any of them, through any one ship becoming disabled and unmanageable during the charge,—an event which would result in the most untoward consequences. Machine-guns play a prominent part in this ideal battle, but there is a strong bias on the part of the author in favour of the Hotchkiss guns; and to such an extent does this exist, that he has armed his Turkish fleet with those weapons, totally ignoring the fact that the Turks have lately purchased 200 Nordenfelt guns. Then, in the separate account of the doings of the corvettes and torpedo-boats, which remained at some distance from the scene of the general action, he states:—"The Iris and Mercury were most valuable for destroying the enemy's (torpedo) boats, but they were not fast enough for this service; besides, Hotchkiss guns would have been much more effective than 64-pounders." But where, we would ask, were the Nordenfelt guns with which those vessels are armed, weapons which have been proved on many occasions as most effective for destroying torpedo-boats? The Hotchkiss were unable to prevent seven out of the nine English torpedo-boats which deliberately attacked the enemy from being successful; and in one of these attempts, though the torpedo-boat was riddled by the Hotchkiss shells, yet she is accredited with successfully discharging her Whitehead, and sinking her opponent. Notwithstanding the statement that a Lieutenant in charge of one of our torpedo-boats had been firing his Whiteheads without removing their safety-pins (such palpable ignorance, we trust, exists only in the imagination of the author), the torpedoes are allowed a considerable share in the destruction of the enemy, no fewer than 10 of their ships being sunk by their means, which proves the favourable opinion of the author in regard to the effectiveness of the Whitehead torpedo attack, and the inadequacy of the nets and Hotchkiss guns, &c, for the protection of the ships. A separate engagement is supposed to have occurred between the corvettes and flotillas of torpedo-boats, but though the latter, numbering on both sides 37 boats, were attacked by the former, numbering seven vessels, yet the loss of only one of the corvettes is recorded as having been achieved by a torpedo, which appears incredible. In regard to the question of the employment of torpedo-boats in a general action between two fleets, there must always exist an extreme liability of serious accidents happening from mistaken identity, in the general confusion which must always arise in a more or less degree under such circumstances, by which a torpedo-boat may fire her torpedo at one of her own ships, or vice versâ. No mention is made of such a catastrophe happening during the battle of Port Said; but possibly it may be due to this cause that the Polyphemus is returned in the list of casualties as "Missing, nothing known." Other incidents are alleged as having occurred in this Naval engagement which certainly reflect seriously on our Naval organisation. For instance, the author says:—"We (Colossus) had now only one gun in our fore-turret serviceable; not that our after barbette guns had been disabled by the fire of the enemy, but that the scientific improvement for working them had got out of order, and the only man who understood these machines had been killed, and nobody else could find out what was wrong." And again:—"We now found the cause of our after-turret guns becoming unserviceable. A valve in the pipe which conveys the water from the pumping-engine to the guns, which are worked by hydraulic pressure, had been closed by somebody, who probably mistook it for some other valve. When this valve was opened, we could again work our after-guns. So you see that our ship was almost lost—in fact, would have been captured by the enemy, but for the little torpedo-boat—because some person had closed a wrong valve through ignorance. Of course we did not find out who was the culprit, but if we had, I do not think he should have been punished, when you consider the number of engines there are on board of us, with hundreds of pipes and valves in every direction. Then there is the rule of the Service that no man shall remain on board any vessel more than three years, so that, by the time the engineers know their way about pretty well, they are transferred to some other vessel of quite another type, where they have to begin afresh to learn their work. Surely there must be more than one man on board each of our men-of-war who thoroughly understands the construction of the machinery for working the turrets, guns, &c.; neither is it possible to suppose that the gunnery lieutenants, and the lieutenants in charge of the turrets and batteries, are ignorant of the manipulation of this machinery. It hardly seems credible to imagine such an occurrence as depicted in the foregoing statement as likely to occur in actual practice. To understand how to work the machinery for running in and out a gun and loading it, or working a turret, does not by any means need the services of a skilled mechanic, though for the constructing and repairing of them such are required, but is well within the capabilities of the executive officers and the province of their duties; if not, it is high time it were made so. The remarks on our Naval constructive policy are exceedingly able and to the point, but the whole question resolves itself into one of money. Until the country is brought to understand the absolute necessity of allowing the Naval Estimates to be increased each year by a large sum of money, to be devoted to the special purpose of ship construction, it is beyond the power of any Board of Admiralty, however desirous they may be, to maintain the British Navy in as efficient a state as our peculiar position demands. It is astounding to observe how we are permitting the French Navy to surpass ours in point of numbers and power. It would appear that nought but the sad and terrible experience of the defeat of an English Fleet will suffice to arouse the country to a true sense of the comparatively weak and inefficient state of our Navy, our first line of defence, for the universal opinion of those Naval officers and others capable of judging impartially of the true state of the case, so continuously and emphatically expressed, seems to avail but little, though what more powerful argument is needed by the country, unless it be the bitter one previously referred to, is beyond our comprehension. In conclusion, we would recommend Naval officers to study "The Story of the Battle of Port Said," particularly the latter part, as much of value may be gleaned therefrom.

WE long ago directed attention to the futility of a mere change of name with respect to one branch of the quasi-civilian body organised by Baker Pasha. The word "Gendarmerie" is understood everywhere in Egypt by officials acquainted with French, as most of them are; whereas "Constabulary" is a word which conveys no meaning at all, and if they form any opinion of a constable, it is that of a man in armour, with a plume of feathers in his morion, brandishing a bâton, and mounted on a war-steed, caparisoned in mail, like the Constable of Bourbon. Although, in Lord Dufferin's original report, the title "Gendarmerie" was accepted, and the officers assigned to the force were designated by military rank, with corresponding titles derived from either the Irish Constabulary or the Police, the Home Government sent out stringent orders that the word "Constabulary" was to be substituted for "Gendarmerie," and that the officers were not to be military. The departure of Baker Pasha from Egypt, and of the officers who had taken service in the gendarmerie, or police, of the Khedive, on the basis of its original organisation, although it may be connected with representations to be made to the Government with regard to recent changes introduced into the organisation and nature of the force, in opposition to the views of the Chief, is, however, in pursuance of the ordinary leave of absence, which, after so great a strain, was very desirable, as the health of nearly all these gentlemen had more or less suffered.

The Lords of the Admiralty will inspect the Channel Squadron at Spithead on September 19.

The Edison Company have contracted to make installations of the electric light on board the Serapis and the Crocodile. The work will be completed in the former by September 16, and will be carried out in the latter while under refit and repair at Portsmouth.

The Polyphemus has at last been made to perform her work with some degree of accuracy. It is to be hoped that future ships of this type will not require as much tinkering as has been the case with the Polyphemus. This "hideous, misshapened monster" has still to be opened out, to get her old boilers out and her new ones in, so that by the time she is pronounced ready for sea she will have cost a pretty penny, and even then be useless, as she has no stability, and carries no coal to speak of.

Tuesday last, being the 67th anniversary of the Battle of Algiers, we append the names of the surviving officers who served under Lord Exmouth:—Admirals Sir Lewis T. Jones and William G. Whish; Vice-Admiral Arthur T. Macgregor; Commanders George H. Heathcote, Conway R. Dobbs, John Tom, Henry W. Tomkins, Henry A. Perkins, Elliot Morres, and James Liddell; Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas E. Cotgrave, retired, Bombay Artillery; Lieutenant-Colonel James Fynmore, Royal Marines; and Paymaster James B. E. Soden, R.N.

Further examination of the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, at Portsmouth, proves her to be in a worse condition than was expected, and as further reports of her state have been forwarded to the Admiralty, it is probable that her repair will have to be abandoned.

We are informed on good authority that the reports in German papers regarding the effect of the Krupp guns on the hull of the ironclad Ting Yuen were not accurate. The vessel withstood the concussion without any damage, and quite came up to the expectations of her designer, Herr Dietrich, the Chief Constructor at the German Admiralty, as well as of the Chinese authorities.

A court-martial has been ordered on a subaltern of Marines, at Chatham, for "drawing" a brother-officer in the corps. The officer who was "drawn" had quarters in one of the mess bed-rooms, and the jokers dismantled the apartment and piled the furniture in the corridor, the occupant being left walking the bare floor the night long, without a stitch of clothes to put on, but we daresay he may have been all the better for it. The mess furniture, however, was not, and it is said the offender is to be tried for the damage done to Government property.

Whilst practising with Whitehead torpedoes off Ghedingen, in the Baltic, on August 8, the Kaiser, flagship, lost one, which could not be recovered, though searched for by the boats of the squadron for several hours. It is reported that this is the fourth torpedo lost by the vessels under the command of Admiral von Wickede during this summer's cruise.

Accidents such as that which befell the merchant barque Nereid, caused by the want of knowledge in seamanship of a Naval officer bring the whole service into contempt. We do not so much blame Lieutenant Story for his want of judgment and incapacity at a critical moment, as we do the faulty system on which the authorities insist on educating young Naval officers. We congratulate Captain Garforth on the great coolness he displayed at a most critical moment. Captains dare hardly trust young Lieutenants alone on deck now-a-days, simply because so few young officers are really seamen. As mathematicians, no doubt, they are all perfect; but it would be better for them and the country were they taught how to keep their ships clear of danger under every circumstance than, on an emergency, be unable to clear the difficulty, while able to solve the problem in their heads as to the resultant of the forces being brought into contact through their ignorance.

Efforts are on foot with the view of getting a training-ship for boys established at Kingstown Harbour. It is proposed to ask the Admiralty to grant an old vessel suitable for the purpose. This is a project worthy of support. Its consummation would undoubtedly be the means of rescuing a large number of Irish boys from a life of idleness and comparative misery. When severed from the disreputable influences of the associates of their social life, there is no doubt but they would make efficient and loyal seamen, fit either for entering the Royal Navy or Merchant Service. As far as loyalty is concerned, we see that members of the Royal Irish Constabulary who have grown up to manhood in the midst of the most rebellious and most turbulent class in Ireland, and connected with them by ties of kindred and association, are thoroughly loyal after entering the service of the Crown, though they may have been, and perhaps are still, sympathisers with many of the principles which frequently lead their countrymen into such foolish positions. There are, consequently, far less reasons to doubt the loyalty of those who would be severed in their youth from the associations of Fenianism. The fact is, Paddy in most matters strictly obeys the behest of the eleventh commandment. When he finds himself in a position superior socially and pecuniarily to what he formerly held, he will stick steadily to his colours, and will not trouble much whether they are red or green, so long as it is to his advantage to do so.

The ironclad turretship Thordön, which lately foundered in consequence of striking on a sunken rock off the Swedish coast, has been raised and towed into port by the Neptune Salvage Company.

It is reported that the Haytian Government have purchased a steamer named the Ethel, at present in course of construction in Messrs. Nefie and Levi's yard, Philadelphia, and that she is being converted into a vessel-of-war. The principal dimensions of the Ethel are,—length, 185 ft.; beam, 32 ft.; depth of hold, 18 ft. Her armament will consist of one 7-in. Parrott gun amidships, and a 30-pounder forward and another aft, besides four 34-pounder, smooth-bore, broadside guns. The compound surface-condensing engines are estimated to propel the vessel at the rate of 16 (?) knots per hour.

The injustice to Sub-Lieutenants to which we referred has been removed by the adoption of what appears to us to be the least satisfactory of alternatives. Torpedo instruction is now to be made an entirely distinct subject, and in future it will be necessary to obtain four first-classes in order to earn the Lieutenant's commission, instead of three, as heretofore. This is certainly "pileing it on," and the necessity for it is not apparent. Torpedo instruction should, in our opinion, be made a part of the gunnery examination, with a minimum number of marks for a "pass," as we before suggested. We are further informed that three first-classes will be considered to constitute a claim for precedence in promotion, provided that not less than two first-classes shall have been obtained in three subjects—seamanship, gunnery, and navigation; surely, an unnecessary stipulation, as there is only one other subject, and, consequently, two out of the three named are necessary to make up the number.

It is stated by one of our contemporaries that the Admiral commanding the Channel Squadron has issued a Memorandum commenting on the unsatisfactory results of the prize-firing, and admonishing the divisional officers. This is something new, certainly; but as regards the practice, the system is faulty, and calculated to discourage the men. We shall have something to say when the abstract of prize-firing for last year makes its appearance.

The Portsmouth ships of the Channel Squadron are once more snugly berthed alongside the dockyard, to the great satisfaction of those most nearly concerned. They are to make but a short stay, it is true, but sufficient to afford the necessary relaxation from the inevitably tedious routine of a squadron at sea, or in a foreign port, and neither officers nor men will be any the worse for such a respite. The plan, which has been so frequently pursued, of keeping the so-called Channel Squadron abroad for a year or more, while the crews are only given credit for home service, has been too often condemned to need any further comment, and it is to be hoped that the present welcome change will in future become an institution. The Neptune presents a curious aspect, with her mainmast entirely denuded of its heavy yards, in consequence of the proximity of the funnels. The Colossus has her pole-topmasts on end, and is having her bottom coated, so will presumably be ready before long to make room for the Edinburgh, the dockside being strewn with heavy gearing for the latter vessel, and her turret armour still remaining on the deck. The last of the armour-plates—those on the after barbette tower—have this week been fixed in position on board the Imperieuse. It does not appear to be yet determined in what manner the loading of the guns is to be carried out in these towers; the gun cannot, of course, come down when fired, as its length exceeds the internal diameter of the tower. The ships of the Channel Squadron are apparently ready for a start, though the day named is the 5th inst. The Valorous, Hecla, and Polyphemus are at Spithead. It is reported, with regard to the last-named vessel, that the problem of discharging the torpedoes on the beam while at full speed has at length been solved. The Hecla is kept out at Spithead chiefly on account of the scarcity of accommodation alongside the yard at present. The wooden moulds for the Calliope's sponsons have been removed, and the iron work is being proceeded with; the after-frames and stern post of the Camperdown are also making a show at last, and the two solid forged side ribs for her ram have arrived from Liverpool.

Major-General Sir Charles Adair, D.A.G., Royal Marines, relinquishes his appointment on Monday, September 3. Much has been done for the Corps of Royal Marines during Sir Charles Adair's tenure of office. We feel convinced that Sir Charles has earned the gratitude of every officer, non-commissioned officer, and private in the corps, and that there is not one of them who does not regret that the time has arrived for him to vacate his appointment. He is succeeded by Major-General Williams, Royal Marine Artillery.

The Captains and Commanders of the Channel Squadron have been most unfortunate. Captain Maxwell, of the Neptune, and Commander Burnell, of the Agincourt, have, as previously stated, been sent to hospital with fever, and Captain Fellowes, of the Minotaur, and Captain Mead, of the Agincourt, have managed to "pull through" their illness, from the same complaint, on board their ships. We are glad to hear that Captain Maxwell is recovering, and hope that both he and Commander Burnell will be able to rejoin their ships before the autumn cruise commences.

According to Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, the future prospects of Lieutenant Conway Gordon, R.M.A., have been seriously injured "for the good of the public service." That is to say, gentlemen who failed last year to pass have this year been admitted into the Royal Marine Artillery, and have been placed over the head of Lieutenant Conway Gordon, who did pass his examination. This is not right.

The Admiralty are making a clean sweep of all the old and obsolete ships which have for so many years been lying up in the Rotten Row of the various Naval ports. The money obtained from the sale of these hulks is to be applied to expediting the construction of the armourclads and cruisers now building. This is turning money to far better account than when it had to be returned to the Treasury.

We see that Ferdinand Marie, Prince of Joinville, has just been placed on the Retired List, which means that his naval career is officially closed. Few lovers of Thackeray can have forgotten his humorous sketch of the Prince as he appeared at the funeral of Napoleon. The British Government had restored the ashes of the great soldier, and the Prince de Joinville went out to St. Helena in La Belle Poule—which was painted black for the occasion, spars and all—to bring them home. On his voyage home, he learned that war was imminent with England à propos to the Spanish marriages. Without hesitation he threw his furniture overboard—chairs, tables, &c.—and ran guns out of the port-holes of the state cabin, which was thenceforth called "Lacedæmon." According to Thackeray, the proper name for the quartier du bord would have been "Gascony," and he shows us the Prince singing,—

> "Sooner than strike we'll all ex-pi-er

after the manner of our famous Dibdin. War did not break out, but the Prince was none the less extolled to the skies for his exhibition of courage. "The French, Miss Smith," added Thackeray, "hate us profoundly and desperately, and it is considered an act of patriotism to hate us." At the funeral ceremony the Prince and the crew of the Belle Poule cut an imposing, if rather "atrocious," appearance. They were armed to the teeth, had pistols in their belts, and cutlasses, as if they were going to board the saucy Arethusa, or some other English frigate. However, Ferdinand Marie, of Joinville, saw some real service at Tangiers and Mogador, having previously distinguished himself at St. Jean d'Ulloa on board the corvette Créole, which he commanded. He went to the United States with the Count of Paris and Duke of Chartres, his nephews, who took service in the Federal Army, and he shared with them the dangers and disasters of the terrible actions in which Macclennan was overwhelmed in his attempt on Richmond. After a long exile, the Prince returned to France, on the fall of the Second Empire, and served for a short time with the Army of the Loire as Colonel Lutherot; but his deafness was a serious impediment to his utility, though he was on all occasions conspicuous for his personal gallantry, as well as for his stature. Gambetta, however, refused to tolerate his presence in France, and he was obliged to recross the Channel. When the laws of exile pronounced against his family were repealed, the Prince once more returned to his native land, and sat in Parliament for a short time. As he entered the Navy in 1836, he has seen a long but not unbroken spell of service.

Admiral Inglefield's mission to Constantinople has failed, and yet all he wanted was leave for the small party of engineers who were about to examine the levels between Kaifa and the Red Sea, by the Jordan Valley, to begin a preliminary survey. The Porte is evidently not desirous of encouraging the investment of British capital in inter-oceanic canals through Turkish provinces, and yet it was a very harmless form of "crusade" in the Holy Land.

The liberation of Mr. Shaw has been hailed with delight by the Liberal Press, but to our mind it is by no means satisfactory as a measure of justice. We thought it not improbable that Mr. Shaw had laid himself open to arrest and trial by his conduct in sympathetic action with the Hovas, and that if he were indeed a dignitary of the Hova kingdom, as was alleged, he should not have remained within reach of the French forces, in the hope that his Missionary character and nationality would protect him against arrest; but as the French authorities appear to have abandoned their contention, and have practically admitted the arrest of Mr. Shaw was not legally sustainable, there is, in our opinion, a strong case made out for compensation. As to the circumstances in which he was set free at Réunion, instead of being allowed to land at Madagascar or being carried to Mauritius, we know and therefore shall say nothing, but it is quite possible it would have been inexpedient for a French man-of-war to have appeared at St. Maurice.

We hope the Khedive will not read what has been printed lately in the English Press respecting the state of the Thames and the condition of the poor at Croydon and in the heart of London, for, if he does, he may be inclined to suggest to Dr. Hunter and the Stink Commissioners and nurses who have arrived in Egypt just too late to find the cholera at work, that they had better get to England as fast as they can, and look at home, before they seek to mend the manners and customs of the Egyptians.

There is most extraordinary ignorance displayed occasionally by our best possible instructors, in reference to the affairs of Egypt. A respectable evening paper on Wednesday last gravely lamented the want of discipline in the Egyptian Army in the Soudan, evidently thinking that it is the force properly so-called which is acting there; and, on the faith of a stale letter in a morning paper, dilated on the obstacles raised by the incapacity, &c., of the Egyptian officers to the success of the plans of Hicks Pasha, Chief of the Staff. Now, it so happens that Hicks Pasha is, and has been for some time, Commander-in-Chief in the Soudan, and that the so-called army there is a levée of old soldiers and raw peasants sent to the Soudan from Lower and Upper Egypt, and that there are now some 40,000 men under arms engaged in making head against the rebels. The position of an English officer in Egypt, as regards his own country, is very agreeable. If he fails, all the blame is laid on the Egyptians; if he succeeds he gets all the credit, and the Egyptians get none; and the further away are the scenes of his disasters or his glory, the greater the cowardice and other bad qualities of the natives, and the more admirable the virtues of the Europeans under his command, to provide for the safety of the Khedive and his Government, and to insure order, without any extraneous help beyond that of Baker's Police, in two sorts, gendarmerie and municipal. Between the attributions of the two bodies there has been some friction, but the relations between the heads are not affected by differences of opinion respecting the functions of the army and of the gendarmerie. It would seem as if it was supposed that the gendarmerie had more than their own share of work to do, and that they, moreover, were assigned to perform duties properly devolving on the Army, and injudicious communications to London papers enlarging on these matters were taken to be proofs of a hostile and disparaging spirit towards Sir E. Wood and his officers, but with these telegrams it is quite established the chief of the force had nothing whatever to do.

General Order 120, Precedence of Warrant Officers and Non-Commissioned Officers, specially issued on the 20th ult., has not made its appearance a day too soon, and although it has, no doubt, given anything but satisfaction to some individuals holding warrant rank, it cannot fail to have been hailed with delight by the majority of those concerned, who will prefer to go through military life quietly, if possible.

The 18th Section of the authorised translation of the German official account of the Franco-German War of 1870-71, upon which Major F. C. H. Clarke, C.M.G., R.A., has been engaged for some time past, is now in the hands of the printers, and will appear immediately. The volume will give particulars of the occurrences on the south-eastern theatre of war up to the middle of January, 1871, and the events before Paris, from the commencement of the year 1871 to the armistice.

The "Military Handbooks" edited by Colonel C. B. Brackenbury have received a valuable addition in a work on Field Artillery, by Major Pratt, R.A. Colonel Brackenbury could scarcely have made a more judicious choice for such a treatise. The beginning and end of the volume deal with the subject of Artillery in a specially technical manner, the central portion being of almost equal interest and importance to officers of all arms. The proverb, Natura nihil facit per saltum, true enough when applied to the operation of natural laws, did not apply to the case of the modern rifle. Almost at one bound the power of small-arm fire reached its maximum. Not so with Artillery. Here the question is more complicated, and development slower, inasmuch as not only the range, but the projectile has to be considered; and it would be rash to specify the limits of the improvements which experience, combined with inventive skill, may effect. Amongst inventions of more immediate necessity, the author suggests a fuse which shall be both time and percussion. He also recommends the adoption of some portable steel shield. Considering that artillery will be opposed by infantry under cover, whilst the artillerymen are on their feet and exposed, such a defensive appliance would be most desirable, but as yet none has been produced to fulfil all the requisite conditions. Difficulties there may be, but they ought not to be insuperable, and the adoption of some form of portable shield is probably inevitable. In his treatment of field artillery tactically, the author evinces a comprehensive grasp, coupled with exactitude of detail. Of course, much that he says is not here said for the first time; yet the work, far from being a mere aggregation of the opinions of others, is thoroughly original, in the sense of being the product of a mind which, with a complete understanding of it, has cast the subject into a mould of his own. We agree with the author in thinking that the mitrailleuse is in no sense a cannon. As a machine-gun, however, its use pertains to the Artillery, independently of batteries, but there are officers of advanced opinions who hold that machine-guns should be attached to battalions of infantry for field service permanently. The author's remarks in the last chapter on the reorganisation of the Royal Regiment of Artillery are sound. Its permanent division into field and garrison artillery is urgently needed, the former, of course, including Horse Artillery. In conclusion, we congratulate Major Pratt on the manner in which his task has been performed. He has not only given proof of his knowledge of the arm to which he belongs, but he has justified the encomium of Colonel Brackenbury, in speaking of him as "a master," meaning thereby, we presume, a master of the theory "of modern tactics."

About one-half of the officers are married, viz., 9,806; but the rest of the Army includes only 21,149 married men, or about 5 per cent. The above return, of course, only refers to the Army at present under arms, and does not refer to the Landwehr and other reserves.

The two British Commissioners to the Vienna Electrical Exhibition are certainly not "Englishmen," though they are described as "English Commissioners" in the Standard. Sir W. Siemens is a German, and Sir F. Abel is, we believe, a German also. Sir W. Siemens, in his lecture on the Sun, stated that its temperature "was about the same as that of a strong arc light," viz., 2,800°, according to the Celsius scale. So, if we ask what is that, we are informed it is the temperature of the sun, but how the temperature of the strong arc light is estimated we do not know.

Now, what do the English writers, correspondents, and others, as well as our excellent correspondent of last week, mean when they clamour so for what in effect is annexation? Some of them, indeed, would be quite distressed at the notion that they should be suspected of anything so wicked as the seizure of Egypt by armed force, "though Prince Bismarck is in favour of it." But they would not find it easy to explain the difference between what they ask for and actual annexation. Others are only exercised at the prospect of an eventual withdrawal of the British troops, deriding the notion that the Dufferin Constitution can ever be worked out, or that Egyptians can ever govern themselves. The notion of there being a "time when" in sight, the very suggestion of its ever coming in view, makes these people wild.

The Austrian cavalry manœuvres at Bruck from 16th to the 27th inst. will be attended by the Emperor Francis Joseph, the Crown Prince Rudolph, and a numerous suite. The force, under the command of Feldzeugmeister Count Pejacsevic, Inspector-General of Cavalry, consists of 30 squadrons and 18 guns.

There appears to be so strong a point in the remarks of "A Retired Officer," who has addressed a letter to the Morning Post on the prolongation of Major-General Cameron's or any other General's command beyond the period of five years, that the Commander-in-Chief can hardly have seriously considered the question raised, if it is really the case that General Cameron's tenure of the command is to be extended. If General Cameron leaves York on October 1, his date for retirement, in the event of his not being further employed, would be October 1, 1888, and at that date some Colonel would be promoted to Major-General in his place. But if General Cameron is kept on until April next, it will delay that Colonel's promotion, may be, for six months, besides causing some other senior Colonel to be retired, perhaps, on £420 per annum as a Colonel over 58, instead of on £660 as a Major-General, and any Major-General retired for five years' non-employment after this date may fairly plead that but for this he might have been saved. All this applies, of course, with equal force to any General Officer who is granted a prolongation of his command; and except in the field, it is earnestly to be hoped his Royal Highness will insist on the rule being observed, which, under the new Warrant of 1881, can alone do justice and give reasonable contentment to the present or future Generals. No one regards with favour the rules which render retirement compulsory under certain prescribed conditions of age and non-employment; but so long as those rules remain in force, the service has a right to demand that they may be abided by, for by setting them aside in a few solitary instances the whole service may be affected directly or indirectly, and great dissatisfaction will be created, whilst we fail to see that any good can be produced to compensate for the injury that is done.

The Pall Mall Gazette states, on the authority of a correspondent, "that the undress grey uniform now being adopted by the Infantry of the Line will shortly be given to the Militia as well. These regiments will, however, like the Regulars, preserve their scarlet tunic for full-dress parade occasions. The Volunteers cannot be ordered to conform to this rule, but they will be strongly recommended to do so, thus giving uniformity in dress to all these branches of the service. A corps of Mounted Infantry Volunteers is likely before long to become general throughout the country." We were unaware that any report had been received favourable to the grey uniform by regiments to whom, according to Lord Hartington, it was to be served out as "an experiment."

Owing to the many representations made by a Cavalry officer who was on Lord Wolseley's Staff in Egypt, the objection hitherto entertained at the Horse Guards against the British Cavalry being taught to rise in their stirrups when at a trot has been overcome, and orders will be issued directing all recruits and trained soldiers when mounted to rise in their stirrups, as practised both in foreign armies and in civil equitation. The officer in question who has so persistently advocated this change being made has conferred a very great boon on the horse soldier, as well as on the troop horse, for not only will the result be demonstrated by the men becoming better riders, but far fewer cases of rupture will occur, and the ease to both horse and rider will be incalculable. We are surprised that the change has not been made long ago, and it only shows in what narrow and prejudiced grooves our Inspector-Generals of the mounted branches move, not to have of their own accord brought this important subject to the notice of superior authority. We hope this change is the forerunner of others to follow, in the way of lightening the gear carried by our unfortunate troop horses, and that we shall at no distant date hear of cruppers and breast-plates being abolished, and the present Hussar saddle reduced in weight. These important matters are occupying attention, and Lord Wolseley, when once he is convinced that changes are requisite, is not the man to allow appearance, prejudice, or the dictum of any opposed to innovations to prevent them being essayed, because it would be contrary to the instructions hitherto in force in our service.

The Parisians regard the defence of Paris in 1870-71 as the most heroic feat of modern times, and they have already raised monuments all round the capital to celebrate battles in which they were repulsed in their efforts to break the German lines. Foreigners will perhaps hardly accord a palm of glory to the Parisians, who simply held out until forced to capitulate by hunger. Paris was never attacked, but merely invested. The detached forts were sadly knocked about, and a few shells were pitched into Paris to hasten the capitulation, and to satisfy the German troops; but there was no assault, and, consequently, no defence properly speaking. The question is whether Paris should not have done better. When the Germans invested the city, General Trochu had at his disposal 360,000 National Guards, 96,000 Moblots, 62,000 Regulars, 8,000 Blue-jackets, 5,000 Francs-tireurs, &c., in round numbers, 500,000 men, and 1,500 guns. A very large portion of this miscellaneous force may have been useless for active military operations, but there it was, and although the investing force was sometimes reduced to 100,000 men, the army of Paris never succeeded in forcing its way through the first German line, although some very gallant attempts were made under the Military and Naval commanders. That during the six months' fighting nothing very desperate was done may be judged from the fact that during that fighting the Parisians lost only 11,000 men. The siege commenced in the middle of September, and at the beginning of November the National Guard was asked to furnish 45,000 volunteers, and "Offices of Glory" were established in various parts of the city, for men to inscribe their names to the rolling of drums. Out of 45,000 men asked for, General Trochu obtained only 12,000. It was one thing wearing a uniform and protecting ramparts that were not attacked, and going out to try and carry the enemy's positions. The consequence was that all the fighting fell to the Regulars and the Naval Brigade; and the glory of the defence of Paris, such as it was, belongs to them, and not to the Parisians. What has become of the men of the defence? None of them were present at the inauguration. It is true that Generals Ducrot and Vinoy, Admirals La Roncière, Pothuau, and Saisset, and Jules Favre, who would never cede "une pierre de nos fortresses, ni un pouce de notre territoire," and the jovial Picard, Garnier Pages—whose formidable shirt-collars apparently have since been copied by Mr. Gladstone—and other men who stood the siege, are dead and gone. But General Trochu is still alive; M. Jules Ferry, who was mayor of Paris in 1870, is now Prime Minister; Henri Rochefort is still in the flesh, and so is M. Jules Simon; yet none of these were present. Of the chiefs of the National Defence outside the walls, many have disappeared,—Gambetta, Crémieux, Glais Bizoin, and Generals Chanzy and d'Aurelles des Palladines, dead; General Faidherbe paralysed, General Bourbaki placed on the Retired List.

It is not astonishing that the officers who fought in the big battles round Metz should be inclined to jeer at the heroes of Paris who have erected monuments all round the capital to perpetuate the glory of their defence, and who the other day inaugurated that of Buzenval or Montretout. It is well known what thousands of Germans were killed at Borny, Gravelotte, and the other battles against the Army of the Rhine. At Montretout, says an ex-officer, the Germans lost 250 men. Another French military writer informs us that about a year ago some Staff officers were appointed to draw up the narrative of the war of 1870-71, but that General Thibaudin on taking office ordered this work to be suspended. "Unfortunately," he adds, "conquered people object to their history being written, and I am much afraid that 'The Franco-German War,' drawn up by the historical section of the Prussian Permanent Staff, will remain the only work in which one will be able to study that sad and painful epoch seriously. However, we shall not have much to complain of, for the Germans have nearly always been just, and, at times, indulgent towards us. Had they not to explain the immense losses inflicted upon them at the beginning of the campaign? . . . . . . According to the Parisians, the siege of Paris is the most heroic defence ever offered by a great city to an investing army. According to the people in the provinces, Paris should have broken through the German lines, and not have surrendered." General Trochu inside the city was waiting for M. Gambetta, while M. Gambetta outside was waiting for General Trochu. Just as,—

> "Lord Chatham, with his sword drawn,
> Stood waiting for Sir Richard Strahan;
> Sir Richard, longing to be at 'em,
> Stood waiting for the Earl of Chatham."

According to M. Jules Richard, Paris played a passive part in the general defence of the territory. After Sedan, he says that there remained 160,000 men, and that it was a fatal blunder to have sent the corps of Vinoy and Renault to Paris, which ought to have been defended by the Naval Brigade, the Moblots, and the National Guard. However, but for the presence of the Regulars, there would have been an insurrection in Paris before the siege had lasted ten days.

THE MILITIA.

Sir,—Your leading article on the above subject will be read by all well-wishers of the Militia with great satisfaction. It is a subject which really has received very little attention, and to which much too little consideration has been given. Since the schools were established, it is almost incredible how few men have availed themselves of them. This I attribute to two facts,—1st, the authorities do not sufficiently recognise the schools and those who pass through them; and 2nd, commanding officers themselves are much given to under-rating their value. From experience, I am fully aware that it by no means follows that because a man has passed a school that he should know more than some men who have not; this is found in practice to be by no means correct. There are men who are very well up in all matters of drill who have never been to a school; but, at the same time, the average man is not equal to the one who has been to a school. Again, I think that in some manner the system of the schools requires revision. I have heard that in the last year or so their strictness has greatly fallen off; there are so many days off, that the real course is cut down to something like a fortnight. This should not be. It was not so 10 years ago, when I went through a school course. The question of passing schools should not be left so open as at present. Unless an officer evinced a good knowledge of his drill, he should be compelled to go to the school of his arm; and in this there should be no exception, all ranks should go alike, and whether men had been in the Army or not; and the possession of a school-certificate should be regarded as additional qualification for promotion. The fact is really, now-a-days, the more certificates from schools and courses one passes, the better; but the authorities minimise their value by not granting any advantages to those who hold them. Take, for instance, the last of these institutions, "Tactics," what advantage does any officer gain who passes in this subject? Simply nothing, beyond the knowledge he has acquired to himself. In the event of his regiment being brigaded for a field-day, and some attack or defensive manœuvres carried out, he will be considered in no way, probably put to command some half-dozen men in some out-of-the-way place, not even asked to give an idea as to the position of a line of outposts, the defence of a village or wood, or report on any part of the position, in fact, his knowledge will probably be snubbed considerably. I ask, is this the way to get officers to go in for further military knowledge? They receive no pay for it, and have to pay their own travelling expenses. All officers who take the trouble to gain further military knowledge should be encouraged by being employed on all occasions where their acquaintance with the subject would be of value, and afford them practical experience of what they have taken the trouble to study in theory. It is strange that so few Militia officers have passed in tactics, but on inquiry from several of them the reply is, "Oh, what is the good! I shall gain nothing by it." Certainly to many men having to read Clery and Wilkinson-Shaw is not a very entertaining occupation for several months, unless there is some benefit at the end of it. At one time it was mooted that no officer who had not passed in tactics was to be promoted to field-rank. Why was not this carried out? It is so in the Army; this alone would make the examination worth passing. It seems very doubtful whether any more Militia officers will go up for the tactics examination, with the exception of a few who wish to keep up with the times. The question of military knowledge for the Militia officer should be quite open. No such ridiculous remarks to officers, when applying for instruction, as, "Not open to Militia officers." We have a force now called the "Reserve of Officers." Is this system to hold good against them? Are they, who may be required at any time, to be prevented from gaining that information of military subjects of the day which are of vital importance to them? That the question of schools of instruction, and the advisability of officers attending them, requires very speedy and particular attention, there is no doubt, and the service is much indebted to you for bringing up the subject. You state it is said you do not say much in favour of the Militia. Well, myself, I must say you are down on them rather smartly now and then, but in this case you have certainly endeavoured to do them a good turn, and I trust that good will come of it. I could have said more on this subject, having been through every school open to me, and every examination also, but I fear I have trespassed so far on your valuable space, that I will defer any further remarks to a future occasion. Apologising for having gone to this length, I am, &c.,

Tactics.

["Tactics" writes so sensibly and so well on the subject that the apology was not necessary. We do not think we have "come down" on the Militia unfairly, if sometimes we do so "smartly."—Ed. A. & N. G.]

Sir,—I have read the article on "Militia Officers" in the Army and Navy Gazette of Aug. 11, and as I take great interest in the force, perhaps I may be allowed space for a few remarks. In the first place, the great hindrance to Militia officers going in for the tactical examination is the distance most of them reside from their head-quarters. You can hardly expect an officer, however keen, to travel from the South of England into Scotland for the examination by which he gains nothing, when at the same time there is one being conducted within, perhaps, an eighteen-penny cab fare of his own residence. In my own case, it would cost a "tenner," at least; whereas, if I could go to the nearest place, I could do it for 10s. Then the difficulty of finding out the time. At first, the first Tuesday in February was to be the date. When I applied for that, I found the examination came off in January, so was too late; the last one was the day before the inspection of my regiment, so it was impossible to go up for that. If there were, say, four a year, and each officer could go to the nearest, I think you would find more Militiamen with a "t" or "T" after their names. Now the Volunteers mostly reside in their own districts, and are, therefore, put to little trouble in attending. I may be told that the Militia officers ought to do the same; but you find very few who reside in the same county as their regiments. With regard to the "P. S.," that ought to be compulsory on all field-officers and captains. I think sometimes an energetic officer is looked upon rather as a bore! If he ventures to suggest that it is rather unusual for men to march past with their cuffs turned up—it does not look well even to civilian onlookers—he will be told, "Never mind the onlookers, the men are a fine body, and have always been thought so before you came;" and if he mention the "attack," every one will stuff their ears, and beg him to retire to the solitude of his own tent. Then I should like to ask,—How long are the paper officers to be allowed to hang on? I mean men up one training and on leave two; stepping promotion, not helping towards the expenses, and throwing the work of ten captains on four or five; leaving companies nearly 100 strong to the command of boys in their first month's training, with perhaps one serjeant to assist! How is it likely discipline can be maintained? and as for drill, the less said the better. Until the whole of the Militia can be worked up to the pattern of the 3rd Royal Scots Fusiliers—which I have always said, since I had the pleasure of seeing them, is what the Militia ought to be—depend upon it, the country is not getting what it should for its money. I must ask the whole of the officers to excuse my freedom of speech, and to believe that it is only my earnest desire for the increased efficiency of the force in which I have served so long that induces me to write.—I am, &c.,

The following shows admissions to hospital and deaths during a week:—August 11, 11 admissions and 1 death; August 12, 23 admissions and 1 death; August 13, 15 admissions and 4 deaths; August 14, 21 admissions and 2 deaths; August 15, 12 admissions and 6 deaths; August 16, 16 admissions; August 17, 16 admissions and 3 deaths. Total admissions, 114; total deaths, 17. These are divided among the different stations as follows:—Cairo, 25 admissions and 1 death; Abbassiyeh, 10 admissions and 2 deaths; Suez, 13 admissions and 5 deaths; Port Said, 2 admissions; El Wardan, 17 admissions and 2 deaths; Helouan, 12 admissions and 1 death; Ismailia, 3 admissions and 2 deaths: Alexandria and Ramleh, 32 admissions and 4 deaths.

Surgeon C. H. Dixon, A.M.D., has been taken off the sick list, and resumes medical charge of Staff and Departments. Surgeon Maconachie is posted to Mokhattam Heights for duty.

Passage to England will be provided for Major Timbrell, staff paymaster, invalided.

Veterinary-Surgeon Smith has arrived from England, and is taken on strength of command.

My attention has been drawn to the scarcity of Church of England Chaplains with the Forces,—a scarcity which, however, solely results from the present scattered condition of the forces. So long as there were only the two garrisons at Cairo and Alexandria, the two or three Church of England Chaplains assisted by the Civil Chaplains were amply sufficient, but the dispersal of the force into nine centres has naturally rendered them insufficient, and the only measure made has been that a Chaplain, now on his way, has been sent by long sea route, rather than by the more expensive but expeditious overland one. At Alexandria there is one chaplain (O'Neill), assisted by a local clergyman, temporarily attached to the forces (Rev. J. Taylor). At El Wardan there is a chaplain. Another has to do duty at both Ismailia and Suez, forty miles apart, while another, assisted by the Rev. Dean Butcher, of Cairo, has to attend to the wants of the Citadel in the centre of Cairo, of Abbassiyeh, seven miles to the west, Helouan eight miles to the east, and the Mokhattam Hills to the north. As the climate necessitates burial of dead within 24 hours, it will readily be admitted that there is need of further help.

Minor operations have taken place twice during the week. Small bodies of the three arms were exercised as opposing forces on Tuesday morning early, the idea being that "an army corps near Reading detaches a force to make a raid on Guildford, which is covered by a force detached from Reigate." The Northern commander, Colonel Stevenson, C.B., 87th Royal Irish Fusiliers, with six companies of infantry, one squadron of cavalry, and one field battery, drawn up at Frimhurst Bridge, had orders to advance and endeavour to destroy the railway and stores at Guildford; and the Southern commander, Colonel Dixon, 39th Regiment, with a force of the same composition and strength at Normandy Common, receiving information that the enemy was advancing on Guildford, gave orders to march to the Fox Hills to cover the ancient borough of Guildford from any raid. This, however, he was unable to do, for after a few shots at long range, his Northern opponent, by a skilful movement, gave him the slip, and was well on the way to Guildford before anything could be done to stop him. Yesterday (Friday), the exercise was an attack by cavalry on a convoy of cavalry and infantry escorting provision waggons, the general idea being that, "A convoy escorting waggons, which cover half a mile of road in column of sub-divisions, has to pass through a defile, and traverse a tract of open country, two and a half miles long, subject to attack by small bodies of irregular cavalry."

There has been no parade of the troops as a division during the week, nor is there likely to be a parade of this kind for some time to come, as it is evident on all sides that the season for drill and manœuvre on a large scale at Aldershot has of necessity terminated. Even those useful exercises in the handling of the three arms, and which are practised so that all officers may acquire facility in the tactical handling of small bodies of the three arms combined, will also probably cease with the present week. Considerable changes will be made in the composition of the Division shortly. The 87th Royal Irish Fusiliers and 84th York and Lancaster Regiment are under orders for foreign service, the former for India about the 12th, and the latter for Bermuda, about the middle of October. Drafts are also being prepared by several regiments here for their linked battalions abroad. In two instances, viz., the 2nd Battalion, 18th Royal Irish, and 31st East Surrey Regiment, these drafts will be composed of about one-half of the effective strength of each of the regiments named. The labours of Sisyphus were as nothing compared to those of the permanent staff (if anything permanent can be found now-a-days) of a regiment on the home establishment under this deplorable system. After months of training and toil, when a regiment has become thoroughly drilled and disciplined, and is noted for its smartness both on and off parade, down comes the order to prepare a draft; everything is speedily transformed, the regiment is shortly filled up with recruits of a sort, and all the grinding and up-hill work has to be done over again.

Sir Archibald Alison was thrown from his horse at the minor operations on Tuesday, and much shaken. He is now confined to his quarters.

The officers attending the School of Instruction for Officers of the Reserve Forces (Infantry) have completed their course of instruction, and were examined yesterday by Lieutenant-Colonel Cox, 87th Regiment, Commandant, assisted by the Adjutant, Major C. D'O. Harmar, 39th Regiment.

Lieutenant-Colonel J. Alleyne, Brigade-Major, R.A., will accompany Major-General E. Newdegate, C.B., to France, to attend the Army Manœuvres there.

The Principal Medical Officer to-day inspected the draft from the 31st Regiment, which embarks in the Malabar for Bombay on Monday next.

The under-mentioned officers and non-commissioned officers of Yeomanry Cavalry will join the School of Instruction for Auxiliary Cavalry at Aldershot to-day for a course of instruction:—Lieutenants E. S. Sitwell, Derbyshire; A. E. Peat, Middlesex: E. H. Baldock, Shropshire; Hon. H. Jolliffe, North Somerset; and C. H. Taylor, 1st West York; Permanent Serjeants Giles, Ayrshire; Lea, Derbyshire; Bosworth, North Devon; Judd, Q.O. Royal Glasgow; Lowry, Gloucestershire; Howard and Williamson, Hampshire; Gattrell, Lancashire Hussars; Young, Leicestershire; Carter, Shropshire; Woodville, West Somerset; Clark, Suffolk Hussars; and Tomlinson, Warwickshire.

The 57th Army Signalling Class having completed its course of instruction on Saturday last, the officers and non-commissioned officers composing it returned to their respective corps during the week. The 58th Army Signalling Class, composed of non-commissioned officers from various Cavalry and Infantry regiments at home, will assemble to-day at the Army Signalling School, for a three months' course of instruction.

The examination of the officers attending the Army Veterinary School took place yesterday (Friday). Veterinary-Surgeon E. T. Cheesman has been appointed instructor to this school, vice Veterinary-Surgeon to the Staff W. B. Walters, who is about to be transferred to Dublin, as Inspecting Veterinary-Surgeon.

It has been announced in Divisional Orders that the following officers have been noted as having passed the required examination for the rank stated against their names:—For the rank of Major.—Majors Cotton, 99th, and Daubeny, 2nd Battalion, 18th Royal Irish; Captains Josselyn, R.H.A.; Barrow, 26th Cameronians; Gillon, 71st; French, 19th Hussars; Holland, 15th Hussars; Whalley, 39th; Stokes, 83rd (Commissariat and Transport Staff); Spurgin, 1st Battalion, 21st; Maclear, 2nd Battalion, 3rd Buffs; Hannay, 93rd Highlanders; Hogarth, 1st Battalion, 25th Borderers; Garfit, 67th; Dickenson, 3rd Battalion, 60th Rifles; Graham, 16th Lancers; Quill, 84th; Clarke, 26th Cameronians; Gould and Kay, 2nd Dragoon Guards; Parry-Okeden, 2nd Battalion, 60th Rifles. D.A.C.G. Bridge, Commissariat and Transport Staff, in (c) only. For the rank of Captain:—Lieutenants Trench, R.H.A.; Hotham, de M. Thuillier, and Fetherstonhaugh, 26th Cameronians; Doyle, 85th L.I.; Littledale, R.E.; Paterson, 3rd Hussars; Pocklington, 15th Hussars; Lysons, V.C., 90th L.I.; McCalmont, 1st Battalion, 6th; Davis, 96th; Lynch and Bray, 66th; Wedderburn, R.H.A.; Gillman and Treeby, 31st. The under-mentioned officers have been examined in subjects (a) and (b), sec. 4, para. 37, Queen's Regulations, and have been found qualified:—Lieutenant Lascelles, 3rd Battalion, Rifle Brigade; Captains Beatty and Piercy, 39th, and Cooke, 26th Cameronians.

Exercises on an extended scale have been carried out by C (Telegraph) Troop, Royal Engineers, during the past fortnight. A length of seventy miles of overhead wire is carried in the waggons of this troop, and good and rapid work has been done from day to day in the districts around Aldershot. The end of the line remains in the Royal Engineer Telegraph School at the Camp, and the messages are constantly sent from all parts of the line to the base. The whole length of the line paid out daily is patrolled by mounted Linesmen and telegraphers, who test at different intervals, and send ordinary service messages for practice. The field cable can be laid at the rate of four miles an hour in the open; the cable would follow up a division in the field on the march, and would afterwards be speedily made an air line. This troop has always stood first in order of merit at the annual signalling examinations; but by recent order it will not be allowed to compete for prizes in future. Twenty non-commissioned officers and men hold assistant-instructors' certificates, the remainder are trained signallers. On Saturday, the troop was minutely inspected by Major-General Sir Andrew Clarke, K.C.M.G., C.B., C.I.E., Royal Engineers, Inspector-General of Fortifications, who expressed himself as well satisfied with its appearance and efficiency. Captain Jelf has taken over command of C Troop from Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Arthur Mackworth, Bart., ordered to Milford Haven.

A draft, consisting of Lieutenants C. P. L. Bell and A. E. Couper, and four serjeants, two drummers, and 258 rank and file of the 70th Foot (prepared by the 31st Foot), will proceed on Monday next from the Camp, under charge of Captain T. C. Jameson, 26th Cameronians, by special train to Portsmouth Dockyard, and embark in the Malabar for Bombay.

A draft, consisting of Lieutenant C. H. Willey, 38th Foot, and one serjeant, one corporal, and 50 rank and file of the 85th L.I., is held in readiness to proceed to Malta on the 20th inst., to join the 53rd L.I.

A detachment, consisting of one subaltern, one serjeant, one corporal, and 24 privates of the 31st Foot, will proceed to the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, this day (Saturday) to be employed in the construction of field works, until further orders.

A (Pontoon) Troop, Royal Engineers, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Bond, will return to Aldershot from Egham on Monday next, on completion of the annual course of pontooning.

REGIMENTAL MAJORS.

SIR,—As I write from a distance, I fear that I may be too late to add to or comment on the admirable letter (and leading article on it) of a "Mud Major," in your issue of June 16. But as you were good enough to insert last year a letter from me on the same subject, I hope that the case of the new majors may be kept before the public until something is done to put us in a better position. What I urged in my letter was that each of the four majors should have two companies under him, with a captain and subalterns. The major and captain should never, if possible, be away together; in fact, the two companies should be very much like a battery of artillery. This plan, at all events, is better than the present. If the new scheme of instruction is to be carried out, I contend that it would be far better to have it conducted by four individuals in a regiment than by eight, nor would it in any way interfere with single company detachments. Does not a garrison battery occasionally send away detachments? The interior duties in barracks could be arranged as at present. But I confess I have never had to do subaltern's duty, and I can hardly believe that such a thing could be allowed, if represented to any General officer. Pray, Mr. Editor, do something for us, as what your correspondent writes about our position is only too true. At the same time, we do not keep up our own dignity by using the many titles given to us, so I shall sign myself by my proper one,

A SUBSTANTIVE MAJOR.

[Alas! we can only give utterance to the voice of your complaint, and express the opinion that it is justly raised. We believe and hope that something will be done. But let our correspondent, a substantive major, read what a junior major says below.—ED. A. & N. G.]

SIR,—With regard to the position of "Mud Majors,' there have been published in your columns several letters from individuals who are anxious to make the public think that they have been injured by promotion. I, who write from a distant foreign station, am also a "Mud Major," and I hope you will allow me to express my view of our position. The principal grievance complained of is that a major of the present day has to command a company. It is, in my opinion, melancholy to read of an officer objecting to the performance of such a duty; a duty which, if properly performed, is full of interest. It may sometimes happen that, as a temporary measure, and when his regiment is short of officers, a major of the present day may be detailed as orderly-officer; then, let him do it cheerfully, simply as his duty. It is, at any rate, the work of a gentleman. Another grievance expressed by an unhappy running major, is that a subaltern one week after joining neglects to address him by his title. Truly, this is a sad state of things! The service is going to the dogs! However, something may be done; if "Muddier Major," and others of his kidney, will but strut and swagger enough; will rattle their brass scabbard and spurs; will glare fiercely at the offending "sub.," there is hope that that hardened infant may be brought to see the error of his ways, and may be induced to stammer out "Major," at the beginning and end of every sentence, to the great satisfaction of our grumbling friends.—I am, &c., A JUNIOR MAJOR.

SPECTACLES v. BLINDNESS.—"One fourth of those suffering from dimness of sight or blindness can trace their calamity to the use of Spectacles indiscriminately purchased and unsuited to the sight. Mr. H. LAURANCE, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, 39 Old Bond Street, having made the adaptation of spectacles his especial and sole study for upwards of thirty years, personally adapts his improved lenses. Testimonials as to the success of Mr. Laurance's treatment have been received from Earl Lindsay, Sir George Henry Scott Douglas, Bart., Sir Graham Briggs, Bart., Sir Julius Benedict, F. D. Dixon Hartland, Esq., M.P., Lieutenant-General Macmullen, Brentwood, General Torrens, commanding Cork Division, Thomas Cook, Esq., the well-known Tourist Agent, &c. Pamphlet, "Spectacles: their Use and Abuse," post free. City Branches, 6 Poultry, Cheapside, and 22 Fenchurch Street, E.C.

The Army.

2nd Life Guards. The Queen has been pleased to approve of Major Viscount Downe being appointed to serve as Aide-de-Camp on the Staff of Major-Gen. H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, K.G., on his assuming command of a division of the Bengal Army in India.

7th Dragoon Guards—selected as the cavalry regiment to proceed to India next winter—were last quartered there from Oct. 1857 to Nov. 1867—going out under the command of the late Lieut.-Gen. Bentinck, father of the present Duke of Portland. The only officers left in the regiment who were with the "Black Horse" during their last tour of service in India are Lieuts.-Col. Campbell and Chapman, Majors Thomas and Creagh, Capt. Becher, Pymr. Wheble, and Qrmr. (Capt.) Lewis, the last-named being also the only link left to connect the regiment with its service in South Africa from 1843 to 1848.

1st Dragoons. The regiment has been placed under orders to move from Dublin to Newbridge.

2nd Dragoons. The regiment is under orders to leave Ballincollig for Edinburgh.

3rd Hussars. The horses are still isolated because of glanders, and the regiment is, on this account, excused attendance at all divisional parades and field-days at Aldershot. Yesterday the regiment moved from Jerseybrow, south of the canal, to Swan Inn camping-ground, north of the canal, for sanitary reasons.

5th Lancers proceed shortly from Newbridge to Dublin.

18th Hussars are ordered from the Curragh to Dublin.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

A correspondent writes:—"With reference to a paragraph on p. 621 of your issue of the 4th ult., the experimental trials by a division of mule mountain battery 7-pounder screw-guns, attached to H Baty. 4th Brig. R.A., at Aldershot, are under the supervision of Capt. J. W. Hawkins, who served with the mountain screw-gun battery attached to the Indian Contingent in Egypt, and not of Major G. W. Hawkins, who appears to be attached to the Royal Laboratory at Woolwich."

The troopship Euphrates will embark Nos. 2 and 3 Batteries 1st Scottish Division, R.A., quartered at Sheerness, for India on Sept. 15. The 2nd Baty. will be stationed at Murree Hills, Bengal, and the 3rd Baty. at Fort William, Bengal.

Col. R. J. Hay, R.A., has been appointed to the Staff at Head quarters as Deputy-Adjt.-Gen., Royal Artillery, vice Major-Gen. Sir C. Arbuthnot, R.A., appointed Inspector-Gen. of Artillery at Head-quarters, to date from the 1st prox.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Col. J. Garnier, recently serving on the Staff at Malta, has been appointed Commanding Royal Engineer at the Isle of Wight.

Scots Guards. The 2nd Batn., at Wellington Barracks, is under orders to move to Ireland, and will embark to-day, to relieve the 3rd Batn. Grenadier Guards at Dublin. Major-Gen. H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, colonel of the regiment, inspected the battalion on Tuesday. The Duchess arrived an hour later, and a luncheon was provided in the officers' mess. A match between teams of 12 aside (10 best scores to count) of the 2nd Batn. and the 2nd Batn. Grenadier Guards came off on Tuesday at the Nunhead ranges, 200, 500, and resulted in favour of the Scots by 57 points.

2nd Queen's Royal West Surrey Regiment. The 1st Batn., at Portland, is ordered to proceed to Tralee.

4th King's Own Regiment. Lieut. G. Laing-Meason, 2nd Batn., doing duty with the 1st Madras L.C., at Bangalore, died on July 31, at the residence of his uncle, Col. J. P. Grant, of typhoid fever, aged 22. He was buried on the afternoon of the 1st ult. with full military honours in the Oosoor Road Cemetery, almost every officer in the station, including the General commanding the Division, being present. Bishop Codeau performed the funeral service. The corpse was conveyed on a gun-carriage, drawn by six horses of the Royal Horse Artillery. Cols. Grant and Lawson were the chief mourners.

14th West Yorkshire Regiment. The 1st Batn. is under orders to proceed from Bradford to Castlebar.

20th Lancashire Fusiliers. The anniversary of the battle of Minden was commemorated by the 1st Batn. on Aug. 1. On this day each officer and soldier wears in his head-dress a rose, typical of the field of roses where the regiment bore the brunt of the French cavalry charge on the eventful day in 1759. Seventeen officers and 304 non-commissioned officers and men were killed and wounded in the engagement, and on account of its severe loss, the regiment ceased to do duty. The following General Order was, however, published on Aug. 4 by Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick, the commander of the Allied Force, "Kingsley's regiment, at its own request, will resume its portion of duty in the line." The programme of the anniversary celebration at Templemore included the trooping of the regimental colour in the morning, the provision of extra messing for the men's dinners at noon, and the holding of athletic sports in the afternoon. Col. Clarkson and the officers did the duties of stewards, starters, &c., at the sports, and were aided in their efforts by the serjeant-major and quartermaster-serjeant as a sub-committee. Considering the few men present at head-quarters, the different events were well contested, the principal ones being won by the under-mentioned non-commissioned officers and men: Two-mile race—Qrmr.-Serjt. Collins (Pymr.-Serjt. Bishop was a good second). One-mile race—Serjt. Fahy. Half-a-mile race—Serjt. Fahy. Quarter-of-a-mile race—Pte. Renshaw. 200 yards' race—Corpl. Noone. 100 yards' race—Pte. Frazer. Obstacle race—Corpl. Metcalfe. High jump—Pte. Rutherford, 5 ft. Long jump—Pte. Rutherford, 20 ft. 8 in.

22nd Cheshire Regiment. The 1st Batn. is ordered from Jersey to Portland.

24th South Wales Borderers. The 1st Batn. is under orders to proceed from Manchester to Kilkenny.

29th Worcestershire Regiment. Mr. G. F. Hart, late lieut., died in London on the 23rd ult.

45th Sherwood Foresters (Derbyshire Regiment). The regiment is ordered to proceed from Castlebar to Athlone.

47th North Lancashire Regiment, now under orders for India, passed its last tour of foreign service in Canada, Nova Scotia, and Barbadoes from June, 1861, to Dec., 1869, and has been a stranger to the East Indies for over half a century. It went there after the peace of 1815, served in the first Burmese Campaign of 1824-26, and returned home in 1829, embarking for Gibraltar in Sept., 1834, returning from the West Indies in Jan., 1844, and then serving in Corfu, the Crimea, Malta, and Gibraltar until 1857.

ROYAL MARINES.

The following alterations in the recruiting service of the Royal Marines, already announced in these columns, take place this day (Sept. 1), viz.:—Capt. Burrowes relieves Major Rose at Exeter, and Capt. Eden succeeds Major St. John at Taunton; the two officers relieved returning to head-quarters for duty.

Col. W. A. Garner Wright, on the Half-pay List of the Royal Marine Light Infantry, died at St. Helier's, Jersey, on the 20th ult. Col. Wright entered the service in 1839, and retired upon half-pay as a second commandant in Sept. 1877.

57th Middlesex Regiment. The staff serjeants and serjeants gave a dinner on the 22nd ult. in their mess-room at Guernsey, in honour of their newly-appointed serjeant-major. At half-past 7 o'clock the chair was taken by Qrmr.-Serjt. Walter, who, after dinner, explained the object of the meeting, which was to present Serjt.-Major Jefferies with a very handsome malacca stick, on the occasion of his promotion to warrant officer.

59th East Lancashire Regiment. The regiment is expected to proceed shortly from Chatham to Dover. The sentence of the district court-martial which recently assembled at Chatham, under the presidency of Lieut.-Col. Blood, R.E., for the trial of Serjt.-Major T. Mitchell, was promulgated on Saturday last. The accused was arraigned on the charge of drunkenness and conduct unbecoming the character of a warrant officer, of which he was found guilty, and sentenced to forfeit his warrant and be degraded to the rank and pay of a serjeant. The accused is the first warrant officer who has been brought before a court-martial for trial since the establishment of that grade.

66th Berkshire Regiment is expected to be moved shortly from Gosport to Chatham.

71st Highland Light Infantry. The Queen has approved of Lieut. the Hon. H. J. Anson being appointed to serve as Aide-de-Camp on the Staff of Lord Lansdowne, on his assuming the post of Governor-General of Canada, in succession to the Marquis of Lorne.

84th York and Lancaster, embarking for Bermuda in November, passed their last tour of foreign service in the Colonies, serving at Malta, and in Jamaica and Nova Scotia, from 1865 to 1871. It was quartered in India from April, 1842, to Sept., 1859, chiefly in the Madras Presidency, in Burmah, and latterly in Bengal, where it took an active part in the suppression of the Mutiny.

86th Royal Irish Rifles, under orders to leave Bermuda for Nova Scotia, was first stationed at Halifax in 1834, under Col. the Hon. Henry Dundas, afterwards Lord Melville, and was brought home in 1843. It was never in India until 1849, and was then stationed there until 1862. The regiment was one of twelve raised in 1793, and passed its first service in Jamaica and the Cape from 1806 to 1817.

87th Royal Irish Fusiliers. Capt. Wildman has been ordered to relieve Lieut.-Col. Taylor, at the depôt.

93rd Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. A friendly shooting match between the serjeants of the regiment and those of the 92nd Highlanders took place on the 24th ult., at Possil Range, near Glasgow; distances, 200, 500, and 600 yards; seven rounds at each; Wimbledon marking and targets, the 93rd winning by 47 points. A match was fired on the same range on the 28th ult., between 14 serjeants of the regiment and the same number of serjeants of the 5th Lanark Rifle Volunteers; distances, 200, 500, and 600 yards; seven rounds at each; Wimbledon marking and targets. The Highlanders won by 89 points.

102nd Royal Dublin Fusiliers. The Times of Ceylon says:—"The frequent desertions and attempts at desertion from our regiment, the Royal Dublin Fusiliers (the 102nd), we do not hesitate to ascribe to the undue restrictions placed on the amusements of the men by the commanding officer. Amusements are not allowed them which are freely conceded to the men of the Royal Artillery, and the contrast is not likely to foster a good-feeling among the former. A soldier's life in Ceylon, or, indeed, anywhere in India, is not so fascinating that his slightest peccadillo should be punished in a way little less than tyrannical, or his amusements in barracks curtailed, till he obliged to seek them outside, to the annoyance of the public."

Rifle Brigade. Lieut. Morrison, 3rd Batn., is reported as duly qualified for promotion to the rank of captain, having obtained a "special certificate" in every subject at the garrison class which terminated in July last, and being further "distinguished" in military law and fortification.

Commissariat and Transport Staff. In accordance with instructions issued from Army Head-quarters, all officers attached to this corps have been directed to pass the examination laid down in Military Law for the rank of Major. The following officers succeeded at the examination held in July:—Assist.-Comy.-Gen. G. I. Parkyn, Deputy-Assist.-Commissaries-Gen. Bridge, Edwards, Ward, Hope, Johnson, Knocker, and Stokes. "Commeatus" asks if "Any of our readers can inform him where he can obtain good books on forage, the different descriptions of hay and oats, difference between good and bad, mode of stacking and measuring, &c.; live cattle and dead meat, tests by which inferior meat may be recognised; and bread-making and baking, qualities of flour and other materials, &c. He says truly, 'A Commissariat officer is frequently called upon to give his opinion as an expert on the above subjects; but the authorities make no effort, either through authorised handbooks or by classes of instruction, to give officers of the Department such information as will render their opinion worth hearing.'"

Chaplains' Department. A correspondent writes:—"I, for one, do not agree with your correspondent who desires a more clerical head-dress for our chaplains than the forage-cap, which, he says, is allowed and sometimes ordered to be worn. It is now very nearly 22 years since I first joined the service, and during that time I have never known more than two chaplains who ever appeared in uniform, and only one of these belonged to the Church of England. It is more necessary that chaplains in the Army shou'd have a uniform, and be compelled to wear it when visiting the hospitals, prisons, &c., than that Naval chaplains should appear in uniform, for this reason: the Naval chaplain is always in his ship, and every man in the ship knows him to be the chaplain, no matter how he is dressed. In the Army, it is very different, as there may be many chaplains at some large camp or station, and they may all dress differently. I knew four chaplains some years ago at Aldershot; they all dressed differently, and wore different sorts of hats, although they all belonged to the Church of England. One wore a hat low-crowned, stiff, and hard, with a leaf as wide as a Panama planter's hat. The hat worn by another, who dressed always as a layman, was an ordinary round hat, such as is generally worn with a cut-away morning-coat. The chaplain who wore the tasseled hat generally appeared in a coat which reached almost to his feet. Another of the four always wore a tall, silk hat, over a buttoned-up frock-coat. And again, another chaplain wore a low, soft hat, and dressed differently from all his brethren, wearing an open waistcoat under a white necktie. Now, I think this shows the necessity for a recognised uniform, such as the chaplains have at present. It is quite good enough, and they, above all men, ought to learn to be content with it, and ought to be made to wear it, I think, as they have no more reason to be exempt from wearing a uniform than the officers of the Medical Department. That the clergy are, as a rule, very hard to manage is a recognised fact, but at least those of them who enter the Army ought to be amenable to discipline, and be ready to wear the same dress, whether they be men of whom Mr. Mackonochie is a type, or men of whom the late Rev. Jack Russell was a type. What the Rev. Capellanus might think to be more clerical than a forage-cap, other brethren of his cloth might possibly not think fit to wear. It might be well if officers of the Chaplains' Department were allowed a helmet, with a gilt cross on the front or top, as a sort of full-dress head-piece. But by all means let them retain the forage-cap, and be made to wear it."

Pay Department. The following changes of station and promotions have lately taken place in the Department:—Major O'Brien from England to the Cape of Good Hope, and Capt. E. R. Reid, from the 108th Regt., to the Home District Pay Office. Promotions:—Staff Pymrs. and Majors Ding, Davidson, and Murray to be chief pymrs., dated April 1; Pymrs. and Majors Bateman, Richmond, and Packman to be staff pymrs., dated April 1; Pymr. and Major A. J. Roberts to be staff pymr, vice Marvin, retired, June 8; Pymrs. and Capts. Kerr and Brereton to have the hon. rank of major from July 1; Assist.-Pymr. G. V. Wellesley to be pymr. and hon. capt. from July 9. There are three cavalry and 27 infantry regiments, and four regimental districts without paymasters; total, 32 vacancies. We hear from Cairo that the officers of the Department continue in good health, but all necessarily extra busy, consequent on the movements of the troops. Col. Olivey, C.B., and Capt. Long were the only officers of the Department in Cairo. Major Thornhill is at Suez with the 42nd, and Capt. Dowdall with the 35th Regt. at Ismailia. Capt. St. John Kneller was expected in Cairo. The district pay office at Alexandria being abolished, the work in future would be carried out by that officer at the Head-quarter Pay Office in Cairo. Considering that in nearly all the Home District Pay Offices there are three and sometimes four officers to carry on the duties, it was high time that three officers should be at the Chief Paymaster's Office in Egypt, as during the campaign there were three for the treasury chest duties specially.

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

Royal Dublin Fusiliers. The annual training of the 4th Batn. has been completed at the Curragh. The conduct of the men in camp was very good, and although they were under canvas during most severe weather they bore the hardship cheerfully. The regt. was inspected by Col. Herbert on the 21st ult., when the inspecting officer was highly pleased with its smart appearance, steadiness, and proficiency in drill. It was brigaded with other regiments next day, and went through the day's evolutions in a manner which reflected the highest credit on the officers and non-commissioned officers.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

22ND MIDDLESEX (CENTRAL LONDON RANGERS). The head-quarters of this corps, under the command of Lieut.-Col. W. J. Alt, returned from Aldershot last Saturday, after a week's encampment and drill on Swan Plateau. Lieut.-Col. Alt commanded the 5th Provisional Battalion during the week, of which the Rangers supplied three companies, the remaining seven strong companies being formed of detachments of the London Irish, Brighton, and other corps. On Monday and Tuesday the battalion was kept steadily at drill; the attack formation was practised each day at the evening parade, when the Nordenfelt guns took part, and proved to be easily handled. The usual brigade-drill, in conjunction with the Rifle Brigade and Royal Irish Fusiliers, was held on Wednesday; while Thursday and Friday were devoted to field-days, the first towards Mitchet Bridge, the last bordering on the Long Valley. Major-Gen. H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught inspected the battalion on Saturday, when his Royal Highness highly complimented Col. Alt on the soldierly manner in which the 5th Provisional Battalion had done its work during the week. Great praise is certainly due to Major Adderley, the Adjt. of the Rangers, for the results secured, for it was owing to his great tact and judgment that not a single case was brought before the Colonel in the orderly-room during the week. More strange still, the officers vied with each other in supporting Col. Alt, all individuality being sunk in the desire that the battalion, as a whole, should do well. On Saturday, the battalion returned to London, Majors Ford, Vaughan-Jones, and Tamplin being detached with their respective commands. The Nordenfelt machine-guns went through the whole of the field-days, and were fired on Friday at the range beneath Cæsar's Camp, in the presence of Sir Archibald Alison, Col. Williams, R.A., and the Staff. At 500 yards, over 60 per cent. of the bullets were counted on the targets after the guns had fired 500 rounds in 2 min. 3 sec. H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, Sir Archibald Alison, and all who saw the guns at work expressed themselves as highly pleased and satisfied with the working both of the Nordenfelt gun and of the Alt carriage.

The work in which during the past month over five thousand officers and men of Infantry Volunteer Corps, from various parts of Great Britain, have been engaged at Aldershot, in association with regiments of the Line, was brought to a close on Saturday last by an official inspection of the five Provisional Battalions, under command of Lieut.-Col. Alt., by Major-Gen. H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught. After the inspection, the Duke of Connaught said that he would have great pleasure in making a favourable report upon the good conduct and drill which had characterised their stay at Aldershot. The battalion had laboured under the disadvantage that it was composed of detachments representing different corps; but it was evident to him that all had tried to do their best, and that they had succeeded. Of course there were some companies better than others; this must necessarily happen in a battalion so constituted. He had noticed, however, in a close observation, not only of that morning's work, but on the two other occasions when they were under his command, that every man appeared animated with the desire to do his utmost to maintain the credit of his corps. After pointing out some few mistakes in drill by some of the men and officers, his Royal Highness spoke of the field days, in both of which he said the battalion did well. On the previous day, at an exciting moment, officers and non-commissioned officers showed how well they had the men in hand. In conclusion, his Royal Highness hoped that the week's work had been very instructive, and that they would all come down again, adding that the regular troops would be very glad to see them.

SOLDIERS' BALANCES UNCLAIMED.

Mr. Edward Preston says:—"Since my letter on the above subject appeared Sir Walter Barttelot, M.P., has again endeavoured to obtain the printing of the return presented to Parliament on July 12; but Lord Hartington refused to entertain Sir Walter Barttelot's proposal. Thus for the present the matter is shelved. I would venture to draw attention to the fact that this return could have been printed and extensively circulated without costing the taxpayers one shilling; the interest on these unclaimed balances would probably have been found sufficient to defray the proposed outlay for printing many times over. I still hope to see these lists of "Soldiers' Unclaimed Balances" published in newspapers likely to be seen by the persons interested. Of the value of publicity in such cases, I annex three examples:—1. Dormant Funds in Chancery.—The result of the very scant publicity given to the first list of these funds was that "about one-half of the stock supposed to be unclaimed was transferred out of Court to successful claimants." 2. Unclaimed Dividends.—A claimant recently succeeded in making good his title to dividends which had gone on accumulating for 163 years. The original stockholder invested £100 in the Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation. The fund to be handed over was £3,600. 3. Surplus Assets.—In winding up the Thames Tunnel Company several thousand pounds awaited distribution. The persons entitled could not be traced by the company's books, so the directors took the common-sense course of advertising the names and last-known addresses of the original shareholders, with the amounts divisible. The result was that every person (save two) made good his or her claim."

The Admiralty have ordered the discharge of Barnes, messman, from the Cambridge, and directed that he is not to be re-entered in that capacity in any harbour ship. The "Cambridge Scandal" does not appear to have "died out" yet.

CHOLERA.—Appalling as are the reports from Egypt, how few think of our enormous annual sacrifice of valuable lives from scarlet fever, measles, and small-pox. All heads of families should insist upon the daily use, in bed-room, bath-room, and nursery, of WRIGHT'S COAL TAR SOAP, the only true and simple preventive of infectious disease, and a certain cure of all disorders of the skin.

This Asylum was opened in February, 1854, to provide a home for the widows of non-commissioned officers and privates of the Army of not less than 50 years of age.

There are 65 widows in the Asylum.

Each widow has a furnished room, and receives seven shillings weekly, besides a monthly allowance of two shillings and sixpence for coals.

The House is capable of containing 70 widows, and the Committee appeal to the public for funds to enable them to admit the additional number, the present subscriptions being insufficient.

The funded income of the charity yields only £930, with an additional £50 from the Princess Mary's Fund for Nurses, to meet an estimated expenditure of £3,000 per annum.

An annual subscription of half-a-guinea, or a donation of five guineas, entitles to one vote at each election, with the right of nominating a candidate.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1883.

WE have already referred to the recent step taken by the Government of the Dominion of Canada to place the active Militia of that country on an efficient footing, by providing a permanent force of about 700 men, representing the three arms of the service, to serve as schools of instruction and models of efficiency for the active force. These schools are to be established at the chief garrison towns, heretofore occupied by Imperial troops, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, viz., in the maritime provinces, Fredericton, New Brunswick, an infantry school—Halifax being both a naval and military station in her Majesty's service—in the Province of Quebec, at Quebec, half troop of cavalry, and one battery of artillery, and at Montreal or St. John's (the station not yet decided), one infantry school; in the Province of Ontario, at Kingston, one field battery of artillery, and at Toronto, half troop of cavalry and an infantry school; in the Province of British Columbia, one battery of artillery. The importance of this step cannot be over-estimated. The original Militia law of united Canada, the production of Sir Patrick MacDougall, had in prospect this recent step of legislation, for it provided, in accordance with that officer's well-conceived plans for "modern warfare," in addition to an efficient localisation system, an "advance guard," a "support," and a "reserve." Not until the present time, however, has that essential part of the organisation been developed, viz., the "advance guard," by the formation of the nucleus of a small permanent force. Nor was this force, until recently, considered necessary. Whilst Imperial troops were stationed in Canada, they were the "models" for the active Militia, and their influence for good was felt for many a day. The time has come, however, when it was open to the Government either to allow the force to deteriorate, or to form the missing link in the "chain of responsibility" that devolves upon a State whose resources are so rapidly and steadily developing as are those of the Dominion of Canada. The small permanent force, representing the three arms, capable of expansion at any time, will, it is assumed, supply the place of this missing link. The officers selected as Commandants of the Schools of Instruction have already been tested in many ways. Lieutenant Turnbull, Commandant of the Cavalry School, is well known as a Canadian officer who has received his military knowledge in the British Cavalry, to which he has been attached more than once. Lieutenant-Colonel Maunsell, Commandant of an infantry school, late of her Majesty's 15th Regiment, has attended the different schools of military instruction in England, and has over fifteen years' experience in Canada as Deputy-Adjutant-General. The other Commanders are Lieutenant-Colonel d'Orsonnens, who has served for many years as Brigade-Major, besides having seen service in the Swiss Army; and Lieut.-Col. Otter, who has commanded for several years the "Queen's Own," of Toronto, one of the crack Canadian Battalions of Infantry, and who is the author of a useful regimental book of instructions, "Otter's Guide." The above-named officers have arrived in England, and, under instructions from the War Office, proceed to Aldershot, for three months' further course of instruction with regiments of the Line.

We understand that the alteration of the warrant for the benefit of Colonel Sir Andrew Clarke, K.C.M.G., R.E., will not promote that officer at once to the active list of Major-Generals, but will render him eligible when his turn for promotion comes.

The second part of the annual course of musketry is about to begin at Aldershot, moving and vanishing targets having been supplied for this purpose. This part of the course is of a more practical nature than the first part. It consists of firing at unknown distances and at extreme ranges, up and down hill, and at figure and vanishing targets and moving objects, in addition to the present skirmishing and field-firing, which will also be carried out during the present month. At the conclusion of the first part of the annual course, the commanding officer determines who shall be considered the worst shots in his battalion (the standard being fixed annually by the commanding officer), and all men who fail to attain that standard are exercised in repeating portions of the first part of the course. The following practices will be immediately carried out at the Camp:—(b), practice, individual firing at a "head and shoulders" target, ten rounds, distance 200 yards; (c), practice, individual firing at a "figure" target, ten rounds, distances between 285 and 140 yards; (d), practice, individual firing at a moving target, ten rounds, distance, not under 150 yards; (e), practice, individual firing at a vanishing target, ten rounds, distances not under 150 yards. At certain stations, such as Aldershot, where extended practice can readily take place, special sanction for the expenditure of additional ammunition in this part of the annual course will be given.

The appointment of Professor of the Army Veterinary School at Aldershot having become vacant by the promotion of 1st-class Veterinary-Surgeon W. B. Walters to the rank of Inspecting Veterinary-Surgeon, has been offered to and accepted by 1st-class Veterinary Surgeon E. T. Cheesman.

To the list of Militia Aides-de-Camp to the Queen, composed of six peers, one baronet, and one heir presumptive to an earldom, three more peers have now been added. But what about the many zealous Militia commanding officers who are not the scions of a noble race? Is it to be inferred that they are less deserving of honour than those who occupy seats in the House of Lords? The feeling of the Militia service is very strong on this point, because it is felt that injustice is often done to good officers by this system of reserving all honours for the Peerage.

In the Morning Post of Thursday last, "A Soldier of Twenty-six Years' Service," writing from Woolwich, repudiates the charge of uncleanliness made against soldiers generally, in a letter, in which the following passage occurs:—"What it may be in three weeks' time when the town will be full of soldiers (not the cleanest of men, in whatever service they may be), I cannot divine," &c. Our veteran says that soldiers are daily inspected on parade by their officers, that each man is obliged to change his under-clothing at very short periods, and that barrack-rooms and outhouses are constantly being cleaned and inspected. Under these circumstances (to which he might have added facilities for ablution), he claims for soldiers a far higher standard of cleanliness than that of the civil population generally. We are sure his opinions will be endorsed by all who are often brought into contact with soldiers, and with civilians of the classes from which most of our recruits are taken.

Major F. J. Ashburnham, 2nd Dragoon Guards, is the inventor of an improved model for the study of minor tactics. This model is of the simplest character, and will enable officers at trifling expense to carry on necessary studies in their own quarters.

We have been favoured with a copy of a pamphlet on "Mounted Infantry," translated from a Russian military magazine, by Lieutenant-Colonel H. M. Bengough (late 77th), Assistant-Adjutant-General, Hyderabad Subsidiary Force. The Russian article does not contain anything very original; yet it is by no means devoid of interest. It shows that all the knowledge of the subject possessed by its writer was derived from English books and papers, and from an article by the French General Leval in the Journal des Sciences Militaires for October, 1882. The Russian writer and General Leval look on mounted infantry with marked disfavour, and the latter considers them very expensive and almost useless in the ordinary circumstances of war. All that is told us of our own use of mounted infantry has often been told before more clearly and accurately. The pamphlet concludes with some very practical suggestions from the translator.

The Artillery at Alderney are busy mounting guns in lieu of the obsolete ordnance in that island and in Guernsey and Jersey.

A comparison of some of the new books of regulations, &c., shows the carelessness with which they are compiled. For instance, the Queen's Regulations lay down—of course correctly—that the facings of the Somersetshire Light Infantry are blue; but the Dress Regulations imply that they are white. The Army List persists in giving the badge of a bugle to the King's Royal Rifle Corps and the Rifle Brigade; the Queen's Regulations afford no authority for such a badge being worn by the corps in question. The Queen's Regulations and Dress Regulations both give the facings of the Scottish Rifles as rifle green, as a distinction from the dark green of the Irish Rifles. The Army List, again, ignores the superior authority. These matters are small in themselves, no doubt; but they indicate a want of concert, or a want of care and attention, and lead to misunderstanding.

The 87th Fusiliers, at Aldershot, now numbers more than 1,000 of all ranks, yet not more than 650 men are available for service in India, whither the regiment proceeds shortly, the remainder being ineligible for various reasons. 350 out of 1,000 is a fair proportion of non-effectives.

The total deficit on Army Votes for 1881-2 was £326,000, the total surplus, £281,000; the Army Estimates for that year, unlike the Navy, were, therefore, exceeded by the difference, viz., £44,000. The chief surpluses were, on Militia Pay, &c., £21,000; Yeomanry, £8,000; Army Reserve, £13,000; Clothing, £18,000; Retired Pay, £57,000; and Out-Pensions, £30,000; all other Votes showing deficits,—the Supply and Manufacture of Warlike Stores alone amounting to over £116,000; Provisions, £36,000; Commissariat, £31,000; and War Office, £17,000.

The passion for decorations is becoming a raving mania. The excesses of it justify the opposition of the old Military Tories to giving medals, &c., at all. One correspondent takes advantage of the paragraph in our paper in which a Militia regiment and its Colonel were written of in laudatory terms, to lament that the officer will have to retire at 62, "without a long-service medal to show for it." Our correspondent gives some reasons why the Militia do not come to the front in examinations in tactics, which are valid, but they are explanations and excuses. To the unpopularity of the Militia he actually thinks an antidote might be afforded, if "some sort of decoration were granted to officers of over 20 or 22 years' service, to be extended to Volunteers."

The examination for musketry certificates for officers and serjeants, to be held next month, will be the last that will take place under the Syllabus dated Horse Guards, May 9, 1883. A special report will be made on every officer who, after this final examination, has not qualified to conduct the musketry training.

The indifference of the British public to the terrible distress of the sufferers from the earthquake at Ischia, which has created such lively and effective sympathy on the Continent, is abnormal and unaccountable. The crowned heads of Europe, Kaisers and Kings, the Pope and the Sultan, the President of the French Republic, Princes Imperial and Royal, have sent in their contributions right nobly, and fêtes and charitable bazaars have been organised with great success at Berlin, Paris, and Vienna, to add to the funds which have been most liberally supported; but though the Prince of Wales has set a good example, and sent £100 to the Lord Mayor's Fund, an illustrious name, the absence of which we do not remember ever to have noticed on any previous occasion when the impulses of charity needed a little patronising stimulant, does not appear in the list of contributors, which—all things considered, the cause, the friendship of Italy, and the susceptibility of the Italians—is most regrettable, and certainly is not politic.

If the Journal des Débats were to address a warning to Germany on account of the fêtes with which this day—the anniversary of the battle of Sedan—is certain to be celebrated all over Fatherland, we wonder what the Nord Deutsche Zeitung would say. These newspaper warnings from one great nation to another are novelties in politics.

Would it not be as well—nay, would it not be proper—for the Government of India to be a little less impetuous in its official announcements than it was when the Ghilzai rising was declared to be general? The fact is, that it was only part of the tribe who rose, and that there is no positive information as to the extent of the insurrectionary movement in the possession of the authorities at Simla.

The most astounding,—well,—narrative" we have seen in print of late is contained in the telegram from Durban to the Standard yesterday, in which it was stated that in Zululand "everything was quiet till Cetewayo came"!

There is a popular belief founded on the assurances of Ministers in Parliament when hard-pressed at the close of the Session, that "the Recess" brings with it an immense accumulation of work to the over-taxed bodies and brains of hard-worked officials. In fact, the things which look like gun-cases, rod-cases, fishing-baskets, and ammunition are merely blue-books, reports, and stationery done up in convenient form, and the careworn statesmen and heads and tails of departments who may have been seen on all the platforms of the great railway stations recently, arrayed in travelling costume, and provided with tickets for the "Flying Scotchman," the "Mad Irishman," and the various other expresses to the parts of the kingdom, where grouse, deer, salmon, &c., are to be found, are going off to the solitude of Highland glens, Yorkshire moors, and peat-bogs to work away during the recess at the problems they were unable to solve while Parliament was sitting. How many anxious officers of both services there are waiting for that something to be done, which the head of the department concerned is actually engaged upon in the stubble-field there this 1st September! It looks as if the honourable Member were shooting, but he is only taking a shot at intervals in the perusal of the great work which is beside the lunch-basket; and if the grievance-mongers could only look into Lord Northbrook's creel, they would find it was stuffed full of Admiralty business; and if they examined the bag Lord Hartington's loader is carrying, they would discover it was crammed with the documents relating to the various proposals which are to be looked into "during the Recess." Well! we hope that health may bring with it happiness to the hard-worked officials, and that the results of their labours may be beneficial to the services.

"Russian Preparations for an Advance on Merv" is the heading in large type of paragraphs in several papers; but on reading the text it appears that "it is believed when the force at Askhabad numbers 15,000 men, that 10,000 will march, under General Camaroff, on Merv." Who are the believers? The news comes from Teheran. We believe Count Schouvaloff distinctly promised our Government that Russia would not attack Merv, and made a bet on the point. We hope he will not lose his money.

Among the candidates at the present Army examination is a great-great-grandson of Lieutenant-General Sir Alan Cameron, G.C.B., who raised the 79th Highlanders, at the beginning of the present century. This is the first of General Cameron's descendants to enter the Army since the days of the Peninsula and Waterloo. The Camerons have always been a fighting race. Of Sir Alan's sons, three entered the Army, and became Lieutenant-Colonels in the 79th; one fell at Badajoz; another, known to every schoolboy who has read the "Great Battles of the British Army," fell at Fuentes d'Onor, leading his regiment. The third served through the Peninsula and at Waterloo. Sir Alan Cameron was not head of his clan. He claimed the title of Lochiel, but after spending large sums in contesting his case, was beaten. The clan, however, looked upon him as its head, and on the successful claimant as an intruder; and it was to Sir Alan, and not to the Lochiel of the time, that George III.'s Government addressed themselves when the Cameron Regiment was to be raised. The present Government did well in retaining the name of the regiment, when the names of every other regiment in the service were changed; for it was raised by a Cameron, by means of Cameron money, its officers were all Camerons when it was first raised, with, we believe, one exception—the Surgeon—and its men were all Camerons. When Purchase was abolished, the Government forgot to acknowledge, in any shape or form, the large sums which were laid out in raising regiments. To an application for a Queen's Cadetship, the answer given was that the raising of a regiment was entirely a matter of past history, and that it had all happened too long ago for any claims on this ground to be recognised.

A body found in the Thames on the night of Aug. 21 has been identified as that of Mr. Arthur Allen, clerk on board the Minotaur. He left the ship on Aug. 17, expressing his intention of returning on board about half-past 10 o'clock. As he did not return, his absence was reported on the following morning to the commanding officer, who caused his description to be furnished to the water-police. Nothing was heard of him until Wednesday morning, when a telegram from the Admiralty announced that a body had been picked up in the Thames, and that in one of the pockets of the deceased a card was found, bearing the name Mr. Arthur Allen, H.M.S. Minotaur. Mr. Hopkins, assistant-paymaster, was despatched to London, and identified the body. His reason for going to London remains a mystery. The friends of the deceased reside at Bath.

Obituary.

Staff Capt. David Moore, Queen's Harbourmaster at Devonport, to which post he was appointed in Dec., 1873, died at his official residence at Plymouth, on Aug. 26. He entered the service in 1851, served in the Baltic during the Russian war, being present at the bombardment of Bomarsund, for which service he received promotion; and gained much distinction during his subsequent career in the naval service. He was buried in the Royal Naval Hospital Cemetery on Wednesday, in accordance with his rank, and in a manner indicative of the high esteem in which he was held by the officers of the profession in which he has so honourably served, as well as the good opinion entertained of him by the citizens of Plymouth.

Capt. George Henry Kerr Bower, R.N., C.B., died on Aug. 26, at Lower Norwood. The deceased entered the Navy in 1828, was promoted to the rank of staff com. in 1864, became staff capt. in 1867, and retired as capt. in 1870. He served in the Blonde at the taking of the Morea Castle, was employed on board the Agamemnon during the Crimean War, was present at the attack on Fort Constantine, and took part in other operations in the Crimea. Capt. Bower commanded her Majesty's yacht Osborne from 1856 to 1864.

EXTENSIONS OF SERVICE & RE-ENGAGEMENTS.

SIR,—Government has at last realised the fact that it is not desirable to make short service compulsory for all private soldiers, and is offering bounties, both at home and abroad, to induce men to stick to their profession. Whether these bounties will hold out sufficient inducement for the men to stay on is exceedingly doubtful. Ready money down is always an attraction to every one, particularly to a soldier, and it is not likely that many will stay on for £2 or £10 when by immediately passing into the Reserve they can get £18. I venture, therefore, to offer the following suggestions, which, at any rate, have the merit of economy, and possibly might not prove unattractive to many soldiers whom it is most desirable to retain with their regiments. At the end of a soldier's colour service (viz., the six, seven, or eight years, as the case may be), why not give to every man the deferred pay he is entitled to, whether he goes to the Reserve or remains with the colours? Men who elect to remain on might be allowed to draw the 2d. a day granted as deferred pay along with their ordinary daily pay during the remainder of their Army service, if they wished to do so. To men of careful habits, this would be a distinct gain, because by investing it in the Regimental or Post-Office Savings Bank they would get interest on their money, which is not granted them at present, while the money is issued in the form of deferred pay, and would thus accumulate a larger sum than £36 plus the bounty offered at home by the end of their twelve years; and if they chose to re-engage, would have a good sum besides their pension towards making them independent in their old age. Also, any man wishing for it might be granted a two months' furlough on extending his service; this would be a boon for the spendthrift soldier, who, on receiving his £18, £21, or £24, would be none the worse for the opportunity of thoroughly enjoying himself, before settling down seriously to a fresh term of service. By this arrangement, Government would save the expense of bounties at home, and the exceptionally high bounty offered in India at this moment might be considerably reduced; and lastly, by getting hold of their deferred pay without having to pass into the Reserve, no doubt many more men would be induced to serve their 12 and 21 years with the colours.—I am, &c., CAVALRY ADJUTANT.

"R." asks:—"How is it that officers are denied a decoration of some sort in addition to the reward for distinguished service? The non-commissioned officer gets a medal with his annuity which he can proudly wear, even should he be promoted hereafter to a commission, while his officer has to rest contented with a reward which in many instances is merely for a few months or weeks, and even this can only be known to his immediate friends or brother officers, to the outer world the mysterious (r) is an unknown quantity attached to his name. Surely it is not much to ask that every officer receiving the reward for distinguished service should at the same time get a decoration to show that he has been so distinguished; it need not be expensive, a cross or star of bronze or other metal and a bit of ribbon would satisfy the old officers who have nothing but their war medals; and if we are considered worthy of special reward, let it be such that all may recognise it."

Major-Gen. W. Roberts, who has been placed on retired pay, with the honorary rank of Lieut.-Gen., served with the 28th Regt. throughout the Crimean campaign, including Alma and Inkerman and siege of Sebastopol (brevet of major, Crimean medal with three clasps, Knight of the Legion of Honour, 5th Class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal; "mentioned in despatches"). He also served with the Okamundal Field Force, in command of 500 men of the 28th Regt. (mentioned in despatches). He exchanged to the 5th Fusiliers, which he commanded for 14 years, and served on the brigade staff in command of the Residency and Rohilcund districts and a brigade at Peshawur. He served in the recent Afghan campaign, in command of a brigade at Cabul, and was commandant of the Bala Hissar (medal). On promotion to the rank of Major-Gen., in May, 1880, he vacated this brigade.

SOME MAGAZINES.

Nineteenth Century, for September. (Kegan Paul and Co.)—The Nineteenth Century for this month is one of considerable merit, its peculiar feature being a translation by Mr. Gladstone into Italian of Cowper's well-known hymn, "Hark, my soul! it is the Lord." The military article is contributed by Lieut.-Gen. Sir Patrick MacDougall, who handles with considerable skill the questions of abolition of Purchase, compulsory retirement for age, and linked battalions. The paper opens with the author's assurance that the unsettled state of the military mind in England dates from the abolition of Purchase, a system which unquestionably provided a fair flow of promotion at no cost to the country. By its abolition, the Government assumed the responsibility of providing an efficient substitute in that particular, and the Government of the day became bound to introduce a measure for the purpose. That undertaking, which was given on July 12, 1870, remained a dead-letter for no less than five years, when at length a Royal Commission took the question in hand, and introduced the sweeping measure of compulsory retirement for age, which it is the fashion to say brought absolute ruin to the professional prospects, and even the lives, of many experienced and deserving officers. Immediately after the question of abolition of Purchase, there follows that of "short-service" organisation:—"Ushered into life with a great flourish of trumpets, at a cost of three millions sterling, it was no sooner born than the bantling was left to fight its way through the world without any of the anxious nursing every new system should receive. On the contrary, the neglect of its conditions on every occasion prior to the campaign in Egypt never allowed it the smallest chances of success, and in this matter successive Governments have been equally to blame in attempting to carry on war on peace estimates." Lord Cardwell's scheme was based on short service, and although long service is hopelessly defunct, and any radical alterations of the present terms of enlistment must probably take the form of a yet further departure from the latter system, it may be interesting to hear the writer's opinions as to the causes which led to the adoption of "short service." In Gen. MacDougall's opinion, the cogent argument in favour of that service is its "overmastering necessity." He further holds that it would be simply impossible to keep up the Army by the means of long-service enlistment, and yet there are not a few officers of merit and experience who consider that it was not the system of long service which brought it into disrepute, but it was the pernicious mode in which that system was administered. The next point to be considered is the advantages of short service? The primary advantage, no doubt, is the formation of a Reserve, but it is perfectly clear that, as the writer puts it, owing to our supposed immunity from war, the cost of the Army will be always kept down to a lower figure than is compatible with a proper preparedness for hostilities. In the event of a European war, the home battalions would have for the most part to be doubled in strength. Peace battalions can only be raised to war strength by the formation of an adequate Reserve for the purpose; and, in the writer's opinion, short service presents the only possible process by which a Reserve can be manufactured out of the Army itself. Gen. MacDougall pursues this subject almost exhaustively, and in some instances seems to do violence to his feelings by drawing attention, though with visible reluctance, to certain conditions in our Army organisation, which, in his unprejudiced opinion, require further pruning. We need not say we do not agree with all his conclusions, but the clearness with which they are stated is incontestable. In addition to this article on military matters, there are several others on interesting and varied subjects which are deserving of attention.

Colburn's United Service Magazine.— Our old friend, Colburn, "the oldest Naval and Military magazine in the world," is fighting what some short time ago must have been regarded as uphill work, with no very cheerful prospects. But now it is rapidly working its way into the position it has always been entitled to hold, and certainly deserves the success it is achieving. The present number opens with a few practical remarks contributed by Surg.-Gen. Munro about cholera in general, and then enters into full and interesting particulars as to the history of cholera, and the course to pursue when it appears in an epidemic form, and also the origin and propagation of the disease, which made its first appearance in 1816. Under the head of "Money's Worth in Our Army" Col. Knollys shows that he is pushing on with vigour his determination to lay before the public reliable information as to what is actually done with the money represented by the Army Estimates, and what ought to be done with it. This seems to be, in the opinion of many practical men, the spot where the shoe pinches, and the writer of the article in Colburn for September treats it in a very effective manner. The article on the Russian Navy will be welcomed just now, when we are told by the experts who write on the subject that "Russia is moving on Merv." So she appears to have been doing for a considerable period, but she has not got there yet. Mr. "Cromie's" article on "The Military Forces of Austria" also appears at a favourable time, and affords some valuable information on a highly important subject. "Tom Donovan's Ride" is capital.

THE ARMY MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

SIR,—The Army Medical Department is much indebted to you for your able article of July 28, in which you so clearly showed the present hopeless condition of the Department, with respect to promotion. To make matters a little clearer, I have drawn out a table showing the ages of the different ranks as far down as the 80th Surgeon-Major, viz.:—

No.	Rank.	Average Age.
10	Surgeons-General	55
30	Deputy-Surgeons-General	53
1st 25	Brigade-Surgeons	51
2nd 25	Brigade-Surgeons	48
1st 20	Surgeons-Major	49
2nd 20	Surgeons-Major	48
3rd 20	Surgeons-Major	48
4th 20	Surgeons-Major	46·5

The above figures show the utterly hopeless position occupied by the senior Executive officers as regards their chance of advancement to the administrative grades. It will be seen the Surgeons-General average only 55, but this is caused by the comparative youth of three of them, viz., 50, 51, and 53, and these three officers will continue to block the List for seven, nine, and ten years respectively. The Deputy-Surgeons'-General grade averages 53, which gives an average of seven years each longer in the administrative ranks before retirement. The senior 25 Brigade-Surgeons average 51, and a considerable number of them must reach the age of 55 before their turn comes for promotion, and they must consequently retire unpromoted. The age of the second half of this rank only averages 48, due to a number of old officers having retired immediately after promotion, in consequence of their having no hope of reaching the administrative ranks. I now come to the position of the senior Surgeons-Major, and never before in any Army, or in any department, has such utter stagnation been seen. The first 60 of these unfortunate officers average over 48 years of age, and the fourth series of 20 has an average of over 46½. Now, let us see the chances these officers have of promotion, even to the rank of brigade-surgeon. The surg.-major next for promotion has 25 9-12th years of full-pay service, and at the most liberal estimate the last of the surgs.-major who joined during 1858 cannot look for promotion to the rank of brigade-surgeon for two and a half years more, or about 27 years' full-pay service, with an average of over 50 years of age! The prospect of these officers for further advancement must be absolutely nil, and the surgeons-major of from 20 to 23 years' service are even more utterly hopeless. How do these facts and figures tally with the Report of the War-Office Committee, in which it was laid down that 48 would be the average age at which the rank of deputy-surgeon-general might be looked for, and 22 years of service the period at which men might expect to be made brigade-surgeons. It was on the above figures the Warrant of 1878 was issued; but in lieu, we find men will not become deputy-surgeons-general till on the verge of 55, and the rank of brigade-surgeon will not be reached till many of the surgeons-major are nearly 50. The only comment to be made on the above is this, can the country expect Executive officers so advanced in years to be physically and mentally fit for their duties? What is the remedy? Adopt the system in force in the Indian Medical Department, viz., pensions for length of service, and thus clear out the upper Executive ranks. The Indian Medical Department receive £365 after 20 years' service, £500 after 25, and £700 after 30; and administrative officers get £50 a year extra for each year they serve in the rank of deputy-surgeon-general. Suppose, then, the following pensions were granted to the Army Medical Department:—£365 after 20 years' service, £500 after 25 ditto, £600 after 30 ditto, and an extra allowance per year for each administrative officer. There would be little lost to the State and an enormous improvement in efficiency. It is well known that the great difficulty in carrying out selection for the administrative grades is the heavy pecuniary punishment inflicted on men who are passed over. If, then, the authorities had their hands untied, and could promote men without punishing those passed over so heavily, increased efficiency of all ranks would follow. Some such step must sooner or later be taken, the sooner the better, if a general collapse is to be avoided.—I am, &c.,

X.

["X." must excuse us if we say that it would tend more to the efficiency of the service as a whole, if the money he proposes to spend on pensions of medical officers, to clear out the lists, were devoted to increasing the power of the subalterns and the numbers of the rank and file; but at any rate, all such schemes as those he suggests, and others of the same kind, are hopeless as long as the Treasury stops the way. The case "X." makes out is strong and clear. What then?—ED. A. & N. G.]

Amusements.

The latest production of Messrs. Leavitt and Caverley, the managers of Mr. W. Edouin's "Sparks" Company at the AVENUE THEATRE, described as a musical comedy in three acts, by Messrs. Charles Hoyt and G. L. Gordon, is entitled "A Bunch of Keys." Songs and pantomimical business of a grotesque kind enliven the action, and the strenuous exertions of the performers occasionally succeed in causing hearty merriment. On the whimsical eccentricities of the scheming lawyer, embodied by Mr. Willie Edouin, and the clever impersonations of Miss Alice Atherton, the humorous effect of the piece mainly depends. Other characters are, however, well supported by Miss Irene Verona, Miss Hetty Chapman, Miss Victoria Reynolds, and Mr. Frederick Desmond, while the brisk movements of Mr. James T. Powers, a pantomimic actor of remarkable activity, show a marvellous capability of continuous physical exertion.

The NATIONAL STANDARD has been provided, by Mr. James Willing and Mr. Frank Stainforth, with an elaborate drama, called "Glad Tidings," requiring a prologue, five acts, twelve tableaux, and a series of striking sensational effects, to properly illustrate the story. In addition to the regular members of the company, Miss Amy Steinberg, Miss Emmeline Falconer, Miss Claire Howard, Mr. Arthur Dacre, Mr. Odell, and Mr. F. Shepherd have been specially engaged for the prominent characters. A mournful memory of the sad disaster which befell the Princess Alice steamer is vividly recalled by the collision on the Thames which wrecks the vessel named Glad Tidings, and the scene on the wharf represents the shed in Deptford Dockyard where the dead bodies were laid out for identification. Apart from the great mechanical effects of the new drama, the picturesque scenery painted by Mr. Richard Douglass, especially a view of Rotten Row, Hyde Park, at the height of the season, will go far to secure a prolonged career for this remarkable dramatic novelty.

Miss E. Farren returns to the GAIETY on Monday, when Mr. Burnand's burlesque drama of "Blue Beard" will be revived.

Miss Mary Anderson, the young American actress, will make this evening (Saturday) her first appearance in England at the LYCEUM THEATRE as Parthenia in "Ingomar, the Barbarian." This poetical play, translated by Mrs. Lovell from the German, was first produced at Drury Lane Theatre, under Mr. James Anderson's management, in June, 1851. The original cast included Miss Vandenhoff as Parthenia, Mr. James Anderson as Ingomar, Mr. Cooper as the Armourer, and Mr. J. W. Ray as the usurer Polydor. At the Lyceum, these characters will be sustained by Miss Mary Anderson, Mr. J. H. Barnes, Mr. W. H. Stephens, and Mr. J. G. Taylor. Mr. Lewis Wingfield has designed appropriate costumes for the revival, and new scenery, illustrating ancient Marseilles and the surrounding country, has been painted by Messrs. Hawes, Craven, Ryan, Spong, and Perkins.

At the competitive examination held at Burlington House on Aug. 13, 1883, and following days, for the Indian Medical Service, twenty-one candidates competed for five appointments, and all were reported qualified:—Mr. J. J. Pratt, number of marks, 2,475; Dr. R. Shore, 2,410, Mr. C. J. Sarkies, 2,341; Mr. W. B. Bannerman, 2,230; Mr. H. Thomson, 2,015, were successful.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE. CHLORODYNE.

From SYMES and Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Medical Hall, Simla, January 5, 1881. To J. T. DAVENPORT, Esq., 33 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, London.

Dear Sir,—We embrace this opportunity of congratulating you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine, Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne, has earned for itself, not only in Hindostan, but all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported into the country, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.
Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff), discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of COUGHS, ASTHMA, COLDS,
BRONCHITIS,
EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,
PALPITATION, HYSTERIA,
NEURALGIA, GOUT,
CANCER,
TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.
GREAT SPECIFIC for DIARRHŒA,
CHOLERA, DYSENTERY.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.
The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations.

N.B.—Every bottle of genuine Chlorodyne bears on the Government stamp the name of the inventor,

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS. — Much watchfulness must be exercised at the present time, and the earliest evidences of ill-health must be immediately checked, or a slight illness may result in a serious malady. Relaxed and sore throat, quinsey, coughs, chronic coughs, bronchitis, and most other pulmonary affections will be relieved by rubbing this cooling Ointment into the skin as near as practicable to the seat of mischief. This treatment, so simple and effective, is admirably adapted for the removal of these diseases during infancy and youth. Old asthmatic invalids will derive marvellous relief from the use of Holloway's remedies, which have brought round many sufferers, and re-established health after every other means had signally failed.

THE condition in which the outbreak of the war of 1870 found the French Army, is generally supposed to have been one of great inefficiency. M. de Persigny, who knew his countrymen well, was, however, accustomed to argue that, if the French had been successful at Forbach, Weissembourg, and Wörth, the deficiencies would never have been heard of. The furia Francese would have carried everything before it. The War Minister's boast would have been accepted as true, and Europe would have been called on to give to France that awe-struck approbation and acclaim which were awarded by her to Germany. But the lesson is worth conning over, though it will never be learnt by us till or if there be imminent danger of national ruin. How serenely content the powers that be are—the Government, the Minister of War, the Times, the City—with the present state of the Army, not because it is satisfactory, but because they believe it will become so! Poor John Bull! "Expectans, expectavit;" expectat, expectabit. But soldiers are not so. Even Sir Patrick MacDougall is uneasy. We are now about sending out 2,000 men to India, to be followed by the usual drafts, and they will be the flower of the flock; but no one who casts his eye over these selected men, and compares them with the drafts sent out before the short-service bungle, can refuse to admit that the soldiers now proceeding to India, picked out of the ranks as they are, cannot compare with the men of 1870. There were a number of soldiers enlisted who were got rid of in 1882, their time being up in that year, and there was a general scuttling-out which alarmed the optimists, and even the Times admits "the facts on the face of them had an exceedingly awkward look." Now, however, everything is going on well, but when our contemporary goes so far as to argue that the cessation of the flow of recruits, caused by calling out the Reserves in 1882, accounts satisfactorily for our deficiency, we are asstounded, or would be, if any assertion of a thick-and-thin Childers' - Cardwell - Stanley short-service fanatic would astonish us. There is, we presume, no "general revival of trade," which, under our system, is the enemy of the Inspector-General of Recruiting. "The recent supply of recruits has not been defective!" Our contemporary does not venture to say good recruits, but is quite cheered up by the way in which our Army is being filled with mannikins of 5 ft. 3 in. and 31 in. in chest measurement, some of them weighing under nine stone. We would much sooner have 20,000 well-disciplined soldiers—men capable of bearing arms anywhere and stiffening our limp battalions in war-time, than 50,000 of such striplings and starvelings. There is no improvement in the type of the recruits, to compensate for the physical deficiencies. Now, it is in such a stress that the Duke of Westminster proposes a system of forced service under the guise of industrial-schoolboy recruits, who shall be educated for the Army, and he and all who study the subject are convinced "something must be done," but we do not think these schools would be sufficient. A boy educated for the sea on board a training-ship takes to the sea naturally, and, indeed, is fit for little else; but a boy educated in one of the Duke's schools need not become a soldier unless he likes, if the State refuses to treat him as a serf. Still, they would be a help, and they would relieve the streets and do good every way. The suggestion shows how far the changes which were introduced so rashly and hurriedly in 1870 have failed to secure confidence in our military resources. Mr. Cardwell, in moving the Army Estimates in 1870, viz., £12,975,000, exulted over the decrease of £1,136,000 on the previous year, and declared his Budget was founded on the policy he had laid down in 1869, "that, in time of peace, our military power should be maintained in such a position as to be capable of easy extension, and with Reserves close at hand, readily available for a sudden emergency." He indulged in many prophetic aspirations, which have not been realised, and he set down our force:—Regulars, First Army Reserve, and Militia Reserve, available for foreign service, 109,225; Second Army of Reserve, 20,000; Militia, less Reserve, 63,000; Yeomanry, 15,300; Volunteers, 168,477. Now, after twelve years of tinkering, Mr. Childers, one of the chief culprits in the work of destroying the typical character and value of our Army, came forward in 1882 with his estimates of £15,500,000, an increase of no less than £2,525,000! And what is the result of the reforms? Well, a large crop of promises, and great expectations from the future? As a correspondent points out, if any sudden necessity, such as that Mr. Cardwell contemplated in 1870, were to arise after the Indian drafts have left this year, it would be necessary to call out our Army Reserve to fill up the home battalions, leaving only the Militia Reserve to represent the so-called Reserve for which we sacrificed our Regimental system, that had stood us in good stead ever since we had an army. Who are the Murphies and Mulligans, &c., whose names appear in the lists of killed and wounded or sick in Scotch or English battalions? Do we get Scotch recruits out of straths and speys by calling the kilted regiments by Highland names, and worrying our brains over the shape of their bonnets? How many Regimental Districts in England give a full supply of recruits born in them to the local regiments? And when the Reserves are called out, what becomes of the local link between the men and the regiments they are drafted into? It is now painfully forced on the reformers that they have failed in producing a workable army out of short-service materials; but they will not admit that they have caused a deterioration of the materials of the Army by their experiments, and they call on us to have patience and wait, and all will be well. And if war comes?

THE Senior Assistant-Paymasters of the Royal Navy have now been upwards of nineteen years in the service. The date (1868) under which they appear in the Navy List is that of the year in which they reached the rank which they at present hold, and at least four, and in some cases four and a half years, were passed by them as clerks and assistant-clerks, waiting for the age of 21 years, in which they were elegible to pass for paymaster. As sub-lieutenants and the now-vanished class of navigating sub-lieutenants were allowed to pass on reaching 19 years of age, and to count service from then, it seems hard that, in addition to the heavy handicapping involved by the present scale of counting "junior service" (in the case of these officers, now over 15 years), their service should count only from the age of 21. The reason hitherto given for not permitting officers to qualify earlier as paymasters, was that they might be put in charge of money, and that until attaining their majority they were not legally liable for defalcations. This objection falls to the ground when all officers, high and low, are, and have been, considered responsible in money matters, be they public or connected with mess affairs, and officers of all ranks are liable to be tried by courts-martial for defalcations. Again, it has been stated the time passed as assistant-clerk and clerk has been simply employed in learning their work. Let this be granted, but we are sure that many of our readers must be aware of cases where clerks have, during the absence or sickness of the paymaster, performed most responsible duties. Why should not such service count for retirement? We are perfectly serious when we say that it would have been better for these gentlemen to have joined the Navy as blue-jackets or mechanics, as at the expiration of twenty years from the age of 18 they would have been entitled to a pension for their service, whereas now, even if promoted to Paymaster (at the age of 36 to 37), they are compelled to serve till death, ill-health, or reaching 55 years of age releases them from the iron clutch laid on them. Retirement exists for them, indeed, but not until they are worn out; if hale, sound, and hearty, they must remain in a service the very name of which they loathe, on account of the treatment they have experienced. Had these officers had Parliamentary friends, their miserable case would have long ago been looked into, but justice they will not get until they can force the hands of the authorities by external pressure; the Treasury is the scapegoat on which opposition to all just reforms is laid; but "where there's a will there's a way." The whole question of reckoning "junior service" in all the departments of the Navy requires revision, to be based upon an assumption of promotion after a reasonable amount of service, but where that promotion is deferred or long drawn out, the delay acts unequally and unjustly upon such unfortunates as are, from various causes beyond their own control, compelled to serve so many years in a subordinate position, as the officers referred to have been obliged to do.

UPON consideration of the Vote for Yeomanry Cavalry in the House of Commons lately, the Secretary of State for War intimated that it was intended to refer the subject of the general improvement of the Force for competent investigation and report. It is now more than ten years since, acting upon the suggestions of a Committee assembled at the War Office, changes were instituted in the organisation of the Yeomanry Cavalry with a view to bringing the service more into harmony with the Cavalry of the Line. In order effectually to ensure the object in view, Colonels Oakes and Seager (both since deceased) were nominated Inspectors of Auxiliary Cavalry in Great Britain. It subsequently transpired, on the occasion of the evidence of these two experienced officers being taken before a War-Office Committee, that they had arrived at somewhat opposite opinions regarding the capabilities of the Force over which they presided. Colonel Seager contended that, with fairly moderate advantages, there was nothing to prevent the Yeoman from obtaining sufficient proficiency in drill, as well as in other important essentials of a Dragoon's duty, to enable a regiment of Yeomanry Cavalry to take its place in the field with Regular Cavalry, and to act with advantage in detached bodies. Colonel Oakes was less sanguine in the views he expressed. Colonel Seager had, no doubt, formed his opinions not so much from the general standard of proficiency of the regiments in his district, as from the marked state of efficiency to which the 2nd West York Yeomanry, under Sir Henry Edwards, and some of the other corps in the Northern District had been brought. In justification of this belief, we may refer to the speech of the Inspecting Officer, on the occasion of an inspection of the 2nd West York, when he said:—"It is needless for me to tell you, Sir Henry Edwards, what report I shall have to make of your regiment; I can but make one report, namely, that in their equipment, drill, and discipline, as well as in the stamp of your horses, the regiment very closely approaches perfection." That this high state of proficiency was mainly attributable to the special facilities and inducements afforded throughout the year for gaining instruction in Cavalry drill and duties was not matter of question, and it is to be regretted that an example so strikingly afforded has not been more extensively followed in the establishment of a really sound system of training for the Yeomanry Forces generally. By adopting the system carried out with such eminently satisfactory results by Sir Henry Edwards's command, the country would become possessed of a highly-trained force of Home Cavalry, fitted at the shortest notice to assume responsible active duty, whilst retaining that special individuality and esprit for which the Yeomanry Cavalry is so remarkable, and which any attempt to lessen by the removal of local designations or associations would be followed by the most serious consequences. In a former article on this subject, we dwelt at some length upon the necessity for having at each troop head-quarters not only the nominal, but the actual, head-quarters of the troop, including accommodation of a temporary nature for both the men and their horses, and a manége, in enclosed space, wherein the men could be instructed from time to time in equitation, preliminary mounted drills, sword and carbine exercise, and in the no less important details of fitting saddlery and appointments. The institution of some such system of troop instruction would be especially valuable, seeing that it would lead to the Yeoman being familiarised, to some extent at least, with stable duties, and the care and management of his horse, independent of that assistance which, under existing arrangements, he obtains from his groom, to whom most frequently may be said to be due the credit of the "turn-out" of the smartest members of a Yeomanry regiment at an inspection. At first, no doubt, even the minor stable duties would be found irksome to men unaccustomed to them; but this feeling would wear off, and become dispelled when the Yeoman was brought to appreciate, as he very soon would, the independence he had gained from the knowledge of the fact that, on his being suddenly required for active service, he would be capable of looking after himself. We hold that, in order to afford opportunities to the Yeoman for gaining such an insight into the practical duties of a mounted trooper, so as to fit him for field service, regiments of Auxiliary Cavalry should periodically be associated with Regular Cavalry in camp or barracks. By this means, the officers and men would not only obtain an insight into the life and varied duties of the cavalry soldier, of which at present they are in most cases ignorant, but a healthy spirit of emulation would be engendered, which could not fail to do good in every way. Even should it be found impracticable to move a regiment of Yeomanry from its head-quarters for association with other troops, much might be accomplished by encamping a regiment in its own locality. Were this suggestion acted upon, a great amount of useful instruction might be afforded, and under proper management the expenses of the annual training could be considerably lessened, a result that would be felt in the increased strength of the regiment not merely on paper, but actually on parade, as it is no secret that to the cost to a Yeoman of the week's or ten days' training, beyond the amount allowed by Government to cover such expenses, is to be attributed the prevalence of that bane of the Yeomanry Service, "absenteeism." We cannot conclude our remarks without adverting specially to the necessity which exists for an allowance to be made to the Yeoman in attendance at foot and mounted drills, to be present at which the troopers have frequently to travel long distances, at great personal inconvenience. In no way could such expenses be lessened more effectually than by the establishment at the head-quarters of troops of suitable shed-stabling for the horses, where they could be fed and made ready for parade at trifling cost; and of barrack accommodation for the men adjoining the quarters of the Troop Serjeant-Major, where the clothing, arms, and accoutrements could be stored, ready for immediate use when required. In this way, the Yeoman's instruction could be carried on at intervals throughout the entire year; and if the example so wisely set by his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief of inspecting occasionally a Yeomanry regiment was more generally followed by General Officers commanding districts, a strong incentive to increased zeal, attention, and consequent efficiency would, without doubt, be circulated throughout the entire force. The Yeomanry, valuable as the service unquestionably is as a link in the chain of home defence, has not hitherto been regarded officially with that favour that it should be. Considering how weak we are in cavalry, and how necessary it is that there should be some reserve to fall back upon, everything that it is possible to do should be done to encourage young farmers to train themselves to the use of arms. It cannot be said that at present any real inducements are offered to young men to enter the Yeomanry. Service in the force entails all manner of responsibilities, and not a little expense; and owing in a large measure to official neglect, Yeomanry Cavalrymen, as a body, are rather despised, than otherwise, in localities where they are not known. All this will have to be changed, before the Yeomanry can be made to occupy the position which it should occupy among the national defences. The changes which are called for must, however, be inaugurated at the War Office; and we are strongly of opinion that a reorganisation based on the principles we advocate, would prove most acceptable to all earnest soldiers in the ranks of the Yeomanry Cavalry, and tend greatly not only to increase the efficiency, but also to popularise the force.

THE great aim of those who are responsible for the administration of the Army should be to encourage zeal. It can scarcely be said that this is done at present. We know what men will do to secure a war medal. But war medals, much as they are valued, afford no evidence that the possessors have done anything more than their duty. On the termination of a successful campaign, the principal Generals and Staff Officers obtain the Bath, the Star of India, the St. Michael and St. George, &c. It would not be possible, nor would it, we admit, be expedient, to lower the value of the Orders of Knighthood by profuse distribution of the several grades, and we think there has been a great tendency to err in that direction recently; but cases are continually occurring in which regimental officers who have done good service, and who ought to receive some mark of their Sovereign's favour, are left unrewarded. In Egypt, a large number of officers were fortunate enough to obtain the Medjidie and Osmanie. It cannot be denied, however, that many who served during the same campaign have been left unrewarded, because there was no means of rewarding them. The fortunate individuals mentioned in despatches on the close of a campaign who hold Field Officer's rank, and are known to the General in command, may get their claims considered, and be made Companions of the Bath, but the number of Companionships is necessarily limited. It follows, therefore, that many a meritorious soldier receives nothing, for the simple reason that there is nothing to give him. In foreign armies it is different, for the issue of decorations is not restricted to any one class. We know that it is no recommendation to the Chinese of the West to point out what foreigners do, though human nature is the same in England as it is in France or Germany, but surely there can be no solid argument in favour of our present illogical system of giving honours according to military caste. The means of escape from our captivity in the bonds of precedent are easy, though they are open to the objection that a growing appetite for these distinctions may be encouraged, and become ravenous and unreasonable. By establishing an Order of Military Merit, however, the authorities would be enabled to recognise in an appreciable form the services of a certain number of regimental and departmental officers who would otherwise be unrewarded. So long as men are satisfied to risk their lives in order to win distinction, it is a most unwise policy to curb their enthusiasm. But as matters stand at present, it cannot be said that we treat our Navy and Army liberally, and the Navy have, perhaps, more to complain of than the sister service. It is not for the Staff we plead. The Immortals, as the French call them, have in recent campaigns been given so much, that a man's doing duty for one day as galloper has been enough, in some cases, to earn a mention in despatches, followed by a recognition, in one form or another. The Staff of the Army in most wars get nearly all the prizes, whilst those with their corps as regimental officers receive all the kicks, do the greater part of the work, generally suffer most of the privations, but cannot hope for much recognition till they are field officers. If an Order of Merit were instituted for naval and military services, it would, we think, gratify the Army and Navy, and in no way lower the prestige of the older orders. Rules might be drawn up restricting its issue to special cases which would have entitled those receiving it to the honours awarded to field officers and those of corresponding rank, as it may be said that provision is already made for those who come to the front during a campaign, by Brevet promotions on the close of active operations. But a Brevet is not a lasting benefit in days when field rank has almost lost its value. What is needed, is some Order which should rank between the Orders of Knighthood and a War Medal, and we do not think the authorities could do better than submit such an idea to the Queen, and call it the Order of Military Merit.

The Champion, from Penang, the Magpie, from the north coast of Borneo, the Flying Fish from the Corea, have been ordered to proceed to the Straits of Sunda, for the purpose of surveying and reporting the changes which have been made by the earthquake and tidal wave on August 27.

Commodore Prattent, appointed in succession to Commodore Purvis, invalided, arrived at Port Royal, Jamaica, on September 4, and hoisted his broad pendant on board the Urgent as Senior Officer at Jamaica. The Griffon and Fantôme were at Port Royal.

The Channel Squadron, accompanied by the Hecla, have assembled at Portland.

The Russian ironclad Dmitri Donskoi, the latest addition to the Russian ironclad fleet, is of the following dimensions:—Length over all, 310 ft.; length between the perpendiculars, 295 ft.; breadth, extreme, 52 ft.; depth of hold, 32 ft.; draught of water, aft, 25 ft. The hull is built of steel, plated with compound armour, varying in thickness from 6 in. to 12 in., and backed by 24 in. of teak. The armament of the Dmitri Donskoi is composed of the following guns, of which the larger calibres are of Russian manufacture. On deck are mounted 16 light guns, ranging from 4-pounders to 9-pounders, 10 machine guns, and two long 8-in. guns, which are pivoted amidships. In the battery are placed 14 $6\frac{1}{4}$-in. guns. Besides these, the vessel carries a supply of Whitehead torpedoes, for which four discharging tubes are fitted, two forward and two aft. The engines, which have been constructed in Russia, are designed to indicate 7,000-horse power, which power it is estimated will propel the vessel at the rate of 16 knots per hour. Steam will be supplied by six double boilers, each 17 ft. long and 14 ft. wide. The propeller is 27 ft. in diameter, and is to make 70 revolutions per minute. The vessel will be frigate-rigged, and carry a complement of 612 officers and men. Besides the Dmitri Donskoi, the following ships-of-war are at present in course of construction at St. Petersburg:—An ironclad of the Minin type, at the Admiralty Dockyard; two cruisers, of the British "Leander" type, on the Galley Island; two similar cruisers at Ochta; and another ironclad will be immediately laid down at the new Admiral's Dockyard, upon the slip from which the Dmitri Donskoi was launched.

Yesterday's daily papers announced the appointment of Lieutenant R. B. Storey, R.N., to the Champion. No such appointment has been made. The officer appointed, among others, is Lieutenant R. B. S. Wrey.

The Fulminant, one of twenty ships proposed in the programme of 1872 for coast service, and nearly resembling our Glatton type, is about to commence her trial-trips. She has a displacement of 5,584 tons; her plates vary from 11 to 13 in., and she carries two $10\frac{5}{8}$-in. guns.

In view of the small amount of seaworthiness possessed by the torpedo-boats of a medium size now in use, the German Admiralty have decided to increase the displacement and dimensions of the boats in course of construction. Whilst the present vessels have a displacement of 50 tons, with 500 indicated horse-power and a crew of 10 men, the new vessels will be 90 tons larger, with an increase of 50 horse-power and a crew of 20 men. It has also been decided not to build any more ironclad gunboats of the Wespe class, but to build instead two swift cruisers of the "Armstrong" type. These vessels will have a displacement of 866 tons, 1,500 horse-power, a speed of 15 knots per hour, and will carry one $8\frac{1}{2}$-in. long Krupp gun.

A torpedo vessel, named the Torpedo No. 1, which has been built for the Spanish Government by the Weser Shipbuilding Company, Bremen, has arrived in Kiel Bay, for the purpose of undergoing extensive trials, before proceeding to her destination. The vessel is in charge of Captain José Chacon, of the Royal Spanish Navy.

The standard of height of the Royal Marines has been raised one inch. It speaks well for the popularity of the Marines that over 70 per cent. of those presenting themselves for enlistment are rejected. Nevertheless, the number of eligible recruits seeking to join far exceeds the demand.

Mr. George Howaldt, of Kiel, has received through a private firm in Hamburg the order to construct two large corvettes of steel for the Chinese Government.

The German corvette Prinz Adalbert was commissioned on the 21st ult. by Captain von Mensing, for the East Asiatic station, as a training-ship for Naval Cadets.

Many Frenchmen who remember the disagreeable consequences which the Mexican expedition exercised on the campaign of 1870, are very anxious to see the Tonquin affair settled now that Germany is once more showing her teeth. We find in La France, which is a peculiarly aggressive print, such paragraphs as this:—"Although too much attention must not be paid to the fanfaronades of our neighbours, it would, however, be imprudent to take no notice of them, and to send to Indo-China troops, whose place, in case of necessity, is on the Eastern frontier." In the meantime, strong detachments of Marine Infantry are being got ready, and will sail in a few days for the scene of action. What with Tonquin and Madagascar, some of the regiments of Marine Infantry have had their home establishments reduced from 2,000 to 200 men, and unless the Black Flags and the Hovas come to terms very speedily, it is clear that the corps in question will not be able to stand the heavy strain imposed upon it. For the moment the French Government has no intention of sending out any "red breeches," because that would imply a state of war, and not a simple expedition; and before declaring war it would be necessary to summon the Chambers, and to obtain their consent. One paper admits that for a few days Admiral Courbet went to war with Anam, and therefore violated the Constitution. But, asks this paper, what patriot will blame the Admiral, when looking at the result? Upon this, another editor, somewhat more of a stickler on the subject of constitutional right, takes up his pen and asks,—If this theory prevails, how shall we Republicans be able to blame Napoleon III. for having violated the Constitution? The general opinion of the French Press appears to be that the Treaty of Anam will have but little influence on the Black Flags.

There can be little doubt of the fact that the French are having a rough time of it in Tonquin, and that the enemy is showing an amount of resolution and audacity hardly anticipated, returning speedily to the attack when repulsed. In a letter from the scene of operations published by the Temps, the French troops are said to be greatly fatigued, and that reinforcements are urgently required. The correspondent writes:—"When, several days before the catastrophe of May 19, I wrote that 6,000 men would be necessary to overcome the resistance of the Black Flags, I was far from believing that events would so soon show that I was correct." And now the same correspondent seems to think a force of 10,000 men necessary to accomplish the work in hand. If the Black Flags give so much trouble, it is to be presumed that should the Chinese Regulars really strike in, the French Government will have to summon Parliament, in order to be able to send out troops in addition to the Marine Infantry now employed. We see that the Paris paper the Soleil thinks that it would be advisable to accept the good offices of England, which Power would be sorry to see a war between France and China that would damage her commerce. However, as a general rule, our rather too suspicious neighbours are convinced that we are urging on China to declare war. That something more than Marine Infantry will shortly be required may be judged from the fact that the force in question, which has to furnish garrisons to all the French Colonies, does not exceed 26,000 men. There can be very few Marines available at present, considering the strain already brought to bear upon that corps.

The order for the organisation of the Austrian Railway and Telegraph Regiment has been published. During peace it will consist of the regimental staff, two battalions of four companies each, and a reserve cadre. At the outbreak of war, the regiment will comprise eight railway companies, three field telegraph directions of the first line, three field telegraph directions of the second line, 43 field telegraph detachments, three mountain telegraph detachments, one reserve battalion of two reserve companies. Having regard to the technical training of the Railway and Telegraph Regiment, its peace garrison will be stationary, and one battalion will be always stationed with its staff. The Colonel and regimental commander will command during peace, but during war the regimental commander, with his adjutant, will receive orders from the commander of the army. Each battalion of the regiment is commanded by a lieutenant-colonel or a major. The regiment is placed under the chief of the General Staff as regards military, technical, and scientific matters, but for administrative purposes under the War Ministry. The several parts of the regiment receive their orders on service and administrative matters from the commander under whom they are placed, by "ordre de bataille." The theoretical and practical training of the regiment is regulated by existing instructions and rules. During war, the regiment undertakes the repairs or construction of railway lines, the working of occupied railways, but it also bears its share of military operations. Outside the actual field of operations, the railway regiment regulates the working of Austrian railways and military transports. The field railway service will be placed under the sole direction of a staff officer of higher rank of the general staff, as "chief of the field railway service," who receives his orders from the supreme commander of the Army. Under the chief of the field railway service are placed the regimental commander and one battalion commander of the Railway and Telegraph Regiment, and several officers of the general staff. The staff officers of the Railway Regiment act as military assistants, are principally employed in inspecting, directing, and superintending of railway works, but may also be appointed as military railway managers for supervising the working of occupied railways. The armed portion of the rank and file of the regiment are provided with Werndl rifles with bayonets, and pioneer swords; the cadet-officer substitutes are armed only with the sword of the Infantry officer, the remainder of the rank and file with the pioneer sword.

If many of the old Madras officers were to return to the Presidency to-morrow, they would scarcely recognise, in the turbaned and loosely-clad regiments of the Army of Fort Saint George, the "old Coast Army." The stew-pan hat and brick-dust tunic are things of the past. The change is all for the better; it marvellously improves Ramasawmy's appearance. To some extent, we have to thank the Afghan War for the change, since many regiments which then proceeded to our North-western frontier were unwilling on their return to give up the comfortable, becoming costume in which they had been serving.

According to a French military writer, the cavalry, during the first portion of the manœuvres at Châlons, exhibited a marked improvement, but a great deal remains to be done to bring it up to the proper standard. The men and horses appear to have stood the camping-out well, but some of the General officers were soon laid up. However, such accidents will happen in the best regulated armies.

It is anticipated that the work of completing and registering the war maps (Kriegskartenmaterial) for the German General Staff will be finished within two years. The amount already expended for this purpose is 290,000 marks, and the Army Estimates for 1883 to 1884 provide a further sum of 30,000 marks. The total sum to be devoted to the above work is 375,000 marks.

A new Warrant will shortly be issued modifying the conditions of the present Warrant as to the promotion of officers in the new Territorial regiments who entered those regiments before April 8, 1873. We believe it is contemplated to give all such promotions in separate battalions without restriction as to one or more steps, but probably with some restriction as to date, after which the two battalions will be finally amalgamated, and there will be one list only for promotion, as in the case of the old double-battalion regiments. We wish again to point out that if it is found to be just to extend the time previous to final amalgamation to any extent at all, justice will not be done unless the time be extended until all pre-linking officers are either in command of their present battalions or have retired.

The Permanent Committee on Infantry Equipment (president, Colonel Harrison, C.B., C.M.G., A.Q.M.G.; members, Deputy-Commissary-General of Ordnance Russell, C.B.; Colonel Stevenson, C.B., 87th Royal Irish Fusiliers; Lieutenant-Colonel Hale, 26th Cameronians), assembled at Aldershot on Tuesday, when several men from various regiments wearing the various equipments about to be reported on paraded, and a series of trials and experiments were carried out. Colonel Dixon, 39th Foot, has been appointed a member of this Committee, vice Colonel Stevenson, C.B., 87th Fusiliers, about to proceed to India. Little interest is now taken in the proceedings of this interminable committee. Although it is termed a "permanent committee," there is really little permanency about it, save in name. The opinions of an unstable committee cannot have as much weight as one whose members are unchanged during the whole of its deliberations.

A letter from Berlin, published in a French paper, says that after the Crown Prince of Germany had inspected some troops at Marburg, and was about to leave by train, thousands of persons began to sing the celebrated war song, "A cry was heard as terrible as the voice of thunder." It is added that the future Emperor left Marburg greatly affected by this bellicose demonstration.

We see that the General Council of the Department of Aisne has just named a Committee, having M. Henri Martin, the historian, for president, and M. Waddington as one of the members. This Committee is to collect elements for the history of the Department during the invasion, not only, we are told, what concerns the catastrophe of Saon (where the powder-magazine was blown up) and the defence of St. Quentin, but also "the numerous episodes, too generally unknown, of the resistance; schoolmasters shot for having defended the passage of the Aisne, mayors and citizens put to death or led away into captivity for acts of heroic abnegation, which should not be allowed to fall into oblivion."

With reference to our article last week on the deficiency of candidates for cavalry commissions, we hear that the authorities are now having recourse to the old expedient of offering the vacancies to the unsuccessful competitors at the last examination of Militia candidates for the Army. What success this has met with at present we are unable to say, but we venture to predict that the result will be unsatisfactory.

The Avenir Militaire, in noticing the articles in the North German Gazette and the Cologne Gazette and the intention attributed to M. de Bismarck of summoning Parliament to ask for money to mobilise one or two army corps, France being intent upon a similar mobilisation, replies:—"We can affirm that there not only does not exist in the French War Office any project of a demand for a credit, but also that the Permanent Staff for technical reasons has abandoned all idea of an experimental mobilisation. Now let Germany indulge in an experimental mobilisation, if she likes; but if she concentrates two army corps on a war footing at our door, do not let her pretend, as she did to Russia, that it is to protect herself from our concentration on the Eastern frontier. Some day or another we shall in our turn try our system of mobilisation to see how the machine works. This is necessary, and it is our right; but, as we allow the Germans to do what they like in their own country, we hope that they will not meddle with the choice of our army corps when we set to work to mobilise. Let Germany arm as much as she likes, but let her permit us to do the same. This will, perhaps, be the best way for remaining at peace."

Orders and decorations have latterly been awarded with a profusion that many think far in excess of the merits of the recipients. But there are some people, like Oliver Twist, always asking for more. The Lancet of the 25th ult. contains a letter from Surgeon-Major Evatt, Army Medical Department, complaining in rather ambiguous terms, of the want of recognition of the merits of medical men, and urging the institution of a new order of Knighthood for them exclusively. It is indeed proposed that ladies who have received the Royal Red Cross should be eligible to be made Knights Commanders, &c., in the new order. But there can be little doubt that they would all decline the promotion offered to them in the terms we give further on; and so the medical men would be left in sole possession. The scheme is not put forward tentatively, or with the slightest trace of diffidence. All its details are complete and settled. The new order "would have the Sovereign as its grand master, 50 grand crosses, 100 knights commanders, and the usual proportion [whatever that may be] of companions, and, further, a junior grade suitable for rewarding individuals of more modest merit who could not claim companionships." As it is not stated otherwise, we presume it is meant that, while the recipients of the new order would be medical men exclusively, medical officers would continue to be eligible for all the rewards that are open to them in common with other naval and military officers. It is seriously proposed (for the Lancet is not a comic paper) that this new order shall be "developed" from the lately established Royal Red Cross Order! When the latter was instituted, it was clearly announced that, with a few specified exceptions, it would be restricted to those women who, irrespectively of social position, had rendered valuable service in saving the lives or restoring the health of our sick and wounded soldiers and sailors. What Dr. Evatt thinks of Her Majesty's gracious design may be told in his own words:—"It seems to me quite absurd that so noble a title should be monopolised solely for a female order when the highest services for which it is given have been rendered by men."—"I think also that in any modern order, women, if they do good service equal to what men would do, should be eligible for every grade of the order, and a woman like Miss Nightingale might well receive a grand cross in so honourable an order; but to classify her and some nurse who has served a month in Egypt is hardly a fitting way of rewarding her service." Such words require no comment; they carry with them their own condemnation. We do not know what Dr. Evatt has done that he should pose as the exponent of the views and opinions of the entire medical profession. The letter in the Lancet from which we have quoted will, we trust, be repudiated by those who are more worthy to represent medicine and surgery.

The new Queen's Regulations contain a form very inapplicable to the troops mentioned therein, the Guards, inasmuch as it relates to "Numerical Titles and County Titles," the Guards having neither number nor county. What, too, is the meaning of the line, "A Company Badge," under badges, mottes, &c.? The Grenadier Guards are shown to have as their regimental badge a grenade. The Coldstream Guards have a star, the Scots Guards a St. Andrew's cross; these are as much regimental badges as the grenade of the Grenadiers, but no mention is made of them.

The first portion of the French Cavalry manœuvres at Châlons has not given the satisfaction desired. La France Militaire is especially disappointed with the results obtained. The men were placed under canvas, the horses on the line. Unfortunately, no saving has been effected by this arrangement. Owing to the excessively heavy rains, which even led to the omission of several operations, the tents had to be repeatedly repaired, and the camping-grounds of the horses changed. Of the ten days devoted to the manœuvres, the first two were devoted to brigade, the third and fourth to divisional movements, the fifth and sixth to divisional manœuvres; whilst the remaining four days were reserved to the Inspector-General, to be utilised by him in testing the manœuvring capabilities of the troops. The manœuvres, according to our contemporary, have shown that no progress has been made since last year, and was best observed in the case of the 5th Division, which manœuvred on the same ground in 1882. This failure is ascribed to various causes. It is stated the men are but badly drilled and instructed, owing to a laxity of discipline in granting frequent leave of absence, that there is a want of suitable local manœuvring grounds, and that the horse material is numerically insufficient. The commanding officers are also blamed, at least some of them, in adhering too much to the traditions of the regulations of 1829, which have only one object, "the inspection by and review and march-past before the Inspector-General;" whilst the only important point, the fighting power, is too much neglected. Those remarks apply in the first place to brigades, but they are still more applicable to divisions, where every irregularity in the step or the direction would cause great confusion amongst the six regiments composing it. The horses were found to be in efficient working order. Both in the brigade and divisional manœuvres, there was an absence of sang-froid on the part of the commanders for which there was no excuse. The drill regulations were published two years ago; they have been in use three years, and Châlons is not the place, says France Militaire, to learn, but to apply them. The movements of brigade against brigade were to form operations of the greatest tactical interest; they were the introduction and preparation to those of divisions. But the results of this year's manœuvres tend to show that the opportunity given to Generals of brigades and divisions for using their judgment cannot be given too frequently. They ought to awaken in the troops engaged respect in the present, and confidence for the future. In Germany, continues the journal, every commanding officer who for any reason is not considered fit to lead his troops before the enemy is invited, after the manœuvres are over, to retire into private life, where a position is given him suitable to his capacity. Unfortunately, this is not done in France, where the officers, except when one retires now and then on his own accord, is permitted to rest for the whole year, with little apprehension of what the next time manœuvres may have in store for him, because they know that, beyond a little extra exertion, they have nothing to fear. As regards the officers of the six horse batteries which took part in the manœuvres, they have shown that they are equal to the occasion, whilst the Commanders of brigades and divisions are not able to properly utilise those batteries. This is a severe condemnation, but it is, no doubt, well deserved.

In the new edition of the Queen's Regulations, we notice that the spelling has been altered, under the head of battles of the 17th Leicestershire Regiment, of the word "Afghanistan," which is now spelt with one f only. But we fail to see why the word should be given twice over. The form adopted with regard to South Africa in the case of the 60th Rifles would answer all purposes, viz., "Afghanistan, 1840-1, 1878-9." Under the Manchester Regiment (63rd and 96th), the sphinx is included among the regimental badges. But both battalions have served in Egypt, the 96th in the first campaign, the 63rd in that of last year. The word "Egypt" is given among the honours, but we are not told to which campaign the honour applies. The same applies to the Gordon Highlanders, Cameron Highlanders, and Royal Irish Fusiliers. Again, why, we should like to know, is the sphinx placed under the heading of battles in the case of the Liverpool Regiment, and under that of badges in the case of the Somersetshire Light Infantry and other corps? In the edition for 1881 the 60th Rifles and Rifle Brigade are given the rose. Not so now. Are they less English than they used to be? Surely not. Should not these and all other Rifle and Light Infantry regiments wear a bugle, and all Fusiliers the grenade? These are points which suggest themselves to those who turn over the pages of this latest "Army Regulations."

The annual cost of a French Infantry soldier is, according to the Budget for 1883, 472·74 francs (£18 18s. 10d.), made up of the following items:—Pay, 148·65 francs; victualling, 222·40 francs; heating and lighting, 7·49 francs; hospital and marching expenses, 3·75 francs; uniform, 44·71 francs; sleeping accommodation, 10·75 francs; arms, 12·21 francs.

A French General, called De Geslin, having written in the most disrespectful manner on the subject of the recent Ministerial circular permitting officers to wear mufti when off duty, has been placed on the Retired List.

THE REVISED MUSKETRY REGULATIONS.

A correspondent from Bengal writes:—"Will you kindly allow me to make a few remarks on the Revised Musketry Regulations that have just been promulgated in this country, and are already in operation in England? The necessity for radical changes in the existing methods of instruction has long been felt by all who have taken an interest in the subject. Our reverses when fighting against the Boers proved this fact conclusively. But the criticisms which appeared in the papers at that time all stopped short at the point at which true criticism should begin. Pages were written in fault-finding generally, but no room was found for pointing out special defects and suggesting the proper remedies for them. It remains to be seen whether our revised system fulfils all requirements, and whether the recent changes have been in all cases improvements. The first object of every system of musketry instruction, I take it, should be to make the soldier have the utmost confidence in his rifle. Any system that fails in this, fails in a very essential point. And that is exactly what ours does. Nothing disgusts a soldier more with his rifle and ammunition than when he sees shot after shot miss the target, and is still obliged to fire a regulated number of rounds at that distance before he can stop. He in the end loses all confidence both in his weapon and in himself. But the very first paragraph in the Musketry Instructions lays it down that the 'School of Musketry is established. . . . . . in order that a uniform system of instruction may prevail throughout the service,' and at the altar of this 'uniformity' every other advantage is sacrificed. We start on the theory that every one who has no defect in his eye-sight can be made a good shot, and we blindly adhere to it. But in practice this result by no means follows. Some men with the best possible eyesight never make good shots. So either the theory is wrong, or the system which applies it is wrong. But no practical good whatever is derived by making every soldier fire a specified number of rounds, at specified distances, in specified positions, whether he can hit the target or no. Many a soldier probably does not fire a single shot again until his turn comes the following year to repeat this course. Our whole system of individual firing wants remodelling. Instead of being the principal part of the course, it would be much better if it were only made the medium (by a process of weeding-out at each distance) of discovering the best shots in each company. There would then be a large surplus of ammunition, to be employed for other purposes. It is, I believe, an accepted fact that for all general purposes of warfare, good shots, indifferent shots, and bad shots are practically on a level, as long as they remain steady in the ranks. Six or eight really good shots are all that are really necessary in a company for special purposes, such as scouting and occupying advantageous positions as sharpshooters, &c. Assuming this to be the case, the alterations that I would propose are as follows. I would make the number of rounds a man expends in individual firing contingent on the points he makes at each distance. If he made less than the required number, I would confiscate the remainder of his rounds, and appropriate them to the general good of the company. Taking the distances fired at last year, the soldier ought to make 33 at least in the first period, and a sum-total of 63 at the end of the second period, to admit of his firing in the next period. No man who fails to make 110 after firing at 700 yards should be allowed to fire at 800 yards, which is a great deal too far for the ordinary soldier to fire with any degree of confidence in the result of his shot. All men who make 145 and upwards in this course should be granted special indulgencies and special prizes. I would give them some special name, such as 'scouts,' and I would not confine their practice to the mere annual course. I would hand them over to the musketry instructor (whom I would not abolish), and I would let them fire as many rounds during the year as he chose to indent for and certify were expended by them in various practices. I would also make some striking alterations in the uniform of these men, so that they might easily be recognised, and I would exempt them from all parades, except commanding officers' and route marches. The day before regimental or brigade route marches, officer-instructors should be furnished with a plan of the proposed route, and should be sent on in advance with their scouts to gain information, and report on the resources of the surrounding country. To ensure that officer-instructors should have a thorough knowledge of this work, I would abolish the present extra subject at Hythe, and substitute for it a compulsory class on scouts and their duties. The tactical advantages of having some such body of men in each regiment are obvious. Even in ordinary drill the want is keenly felt. When a regiment is extended for attack, and 'scouts' are sent out, it is invariably some named files that are ordered to the front. It is purely a matter of chance whether these men are marksmen or third-class shots, the most intelligent men in your company, or the reverse. As a rule, the best shots in a regiment are the most intelligent men. For this reason, a picked team of non-commissioned officers will invariably beat a team of the rank and file, notwithstanding the disparity in the numbers to be chosen from. As the men came to appreciate the advantages they gained by being good shots, they would expend more rounds in voluntary practice, and a great improvement generally in shooting would be the result. The exemption from certain parades, the distinctions in dress, and whatever other privileges might be attached to the post of 'scout,' would all act as incentives to them to 'shoot up' during their course. I have by me the performances of 250 men who went through the course last year, and established a good figure of merit. Had the rules that I have above suggested been applied to them, the result would have been as follows:—45 men or 18 per cent. would have failed to qualify in the first period, 18 or 7.20 per cent. in the second period, and 120 or 48 per cent. at 700 yards, a total per-centage 74·80. Of the 15,000 rounds expended in individual firing, 3,360, or 22.40 per cent., would have been saved. In their subsequent firing, the 45 men who failed in the first period made no less than 921, or a per-centage of 51·16 misses, out of their 1,800 rounds; the 18 men made 151, or a per-centage of 43·88 misses, out of their 360 rounds; and the 120 men who failed at 700 yards made 628, or a per-centage of 52·33 misses out of the 1,200 rounds they subsequently fired. These figures, which might be taken as fairly representative, inasmuch as the figure of merit established was 'good,' point to conclusions by no means satisfactory. In the first and third cases, the chances were against any given shot hitting the target; and in the second case, they were only slightly in favour of the firer. It can hardly be expected that any of the men who fired under these circumstances had much more confidence in their weapon at the end of their course than they did at the beginning, or that any marked improvement was worked in their shooting. And still it would be cruel to suppose that they all had some defect in their vision. Would not a better result have been obtained, if a portion of these 3,000 and odd rounds had been expended in volley and independent firing, and the remainder in making the nervous and timid shots fire at such distances from the target as would insure their hitting it. It is true that if the above rules had been adopted, 67, or a per-centage of 2,680 men only, out of those who began the practice would have fired their complement of rounds. But of these, 57 would have been marksmen, 19 of whom would have made 145 and upwards. Only one serjeant would have failed in the first period, and one in the second. With regard to the new course, the second part certainly supplies a want that has been long felt, and not a word can be said against it. But why abolish the whole of the regimental musketry staff, at the very time that the practical experience they have acquired will be most needed? This hardly gives the new system a fair chance, as the company officers and company serjeants, who now have the entire work of training thrown on their shoulders (should they not have been through Hythe) are only required to pass an examination in the former regulations on the subject. The new ones they will have to work up for themselves. It appears, too, to be very false economy to give no prize for serjeants. The success of the present system will in a great measure depend on them, and it is hardly politic to run even a remote chance of lessening any keenness they may have on the subject."

A correspondent writing from Madras says:—"The world at Madras is occasionally startled by an effort being made by somebody or another to put up the six heavy guns which arrived during the Russian scare of 1878, and would indubitably have shattered our beloved Fort St. George, had they at the time been discharged from its war-worn battlements. The matter has again come to the front, and his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has, I believe, ordered that the monstrosities shall be placed in a sand battery, from which it is hoped that they can be fired without materially damaging the fort, and that a portion of that ancient building shall be strongly revetted with stone on the sea face, and two lighter guns placed therein. When these measures are completed (which may be any time within the next fifty years), we shall await the arrival of a hostile fleet with complacency, not to say expectation. They are also getting on famously at Bombay, where they have mounted their allotment of guns, and stored the arms sent out by a provident Government for supply to our mercantile marine on the outbreak of war. Moreover, Captain Lewis, R.E., has arrived, and has been, or is, at Simla, so there is every probability of the Aden defences being again reported upon.] All this is most encouraging."

The Army and Navy Register of Washington says:—"Military and social circles in Halifax are interested in the fact, which has lately become apparent, that Gen. Lord Alexander Russell, commander of the British troops in Canada, is a far more rigid disciplinarian than his predecessor. About 22 years ago, Gen. Sir Hastings Doyle, then in command, in deference to public feeling in Halifax, discontinued the playing of the military bands which escorted the garrisons to church, but Gen. Russell has now revived the custom. Not only that. Surprised at the small attendance in garrison chapel last Sunday, and particularly, it is said, at learning that the chaplain had absented himself without leave to go fishing, Lord Russell has issued orders that all troops not absolutely employed during the hours of worship shall attend church, and that, hereafter, guard-mounting on Sunday shall be at 2.30 o'clock in the afternoon, instead of 10 o'clock in the morning."

A "Medical Officer" writes:—"On May 28, Mr. Cross stated, in reply to a question, that 'unemployed surgeons of the Indian Medical Service were not the worst paid officers in the Indian service, as unemployed lieutenants would draw 30 rupees less per mensem.' I lay stress on the word 'would,' because therein lies the fallacy. Do any unemployed lieutenants at the present time draw 30 rupees less than unemployed surgeons? No, because there is no such an individual as an unemployed lieutenant in existence to draw it. And I venture to suggest here, that if lieutenants of the British regiments knew that by coming into the Staff Corps, they had a fair chance of being put on less pay than they were before, in other words, if they knew that for long periods they might be 'unemployed,' they would never dream of doing such a thing; and the Indian service would be empty. The impression left upon the House by Mr. Cross must have been that there were such unemployed lieutenants in the Indian service. If so, it is very much to be regretted, for the impression is false. Again, if the unemployed lieutenants are the only officers worse paid than the unemployed surgeons, and if the former do not exist (as is shown by the Indian Army List), then it is evident that the unemployed surgeons are, after all, the worst paid officers in the Indian service. Mr. Cross thinks nothing of an officer supposed to have captain's rank, drawing hundreds of rupees a month less than a captain. All he cares to prove is, that he draws more than a lieutenant, but it seems to me that he fails even in this."

Surgeon G. C. Gribbon and Surgeon R. Haselden have arrived from England, and are posted for duty at Alexandria and Suez respectively. Nursing Sisters Cole and Yardley are posted at the Citadel, Cairo, for duty. Major D. FitzH. Spaight, R.E., is taken on the strength of the command from August 17, and attached to Lieutenant-Colonel Ardagh's department, for survey duties.

Captain H. G. Newcome has been seconded for service as Adjutant of the Royal Artillery in Egypt, dated August 11, 1883.

Passage to England is provided for Lieutenant Young, 19th Hussars, invalided.

Lieutenant F. A. Fortescue, King's Royal Rifle Corps, is taken on the strength of the command, and has assumed the duties of Aide-de-Camp to the Lieutenant-General Commanding. Major G. M. Fox is posted on promotion to the 1st Battalion Royal Highlanders.

Brigadier-General Arbuthnot embarked for England on the 18th inst.

It is to be hoped that the epidemic may now be considered over, at least so far as the troops are concerned, and arrangements are being made for them to resume their old quarters in Cairo. The 19th Hussars will come in from El Wardan to Abbassiyeh on the 29th, and the Royal Artillery and Mounted Infantry will follow them next day. The Royal Highlanders will also move into Cairo on the 30th.

Summer leave for officers will be reopened from September 1 to November 30, on which latter date all regimental officers must have returned to the command. No extension of leave beyond the three months must be applied for.

The general impression is that before November 30 a very considerable number of the troops will have been withdrawn from Egypt, and that the Army of Occupation will consist of four battalions in Alexandria and one battalion at the citadel in Cairo. This will be quite as much as is required, and it is a pity that a suggestion to the same effect made some months ago in your columns was not then adopted. We are an expensive luxury to the Egyptians, at the rate of £48 per annum per man, and we should limit the dose to the strict necessities of the patient.

I remember during the festivities consequent on the opening of the Suez Canal seeing a Frenchman coming out of one of the booths at which the hospitable Ismail provided unlimited refreshments for any passer-by. He was a stout man, with large receptive capacities and good digestive organs, and stroking contentedly his capacious waistcoat he murmured, "J'ai mangé le patrimoine de trois fellahs!" We are doing something of the same sort, for it has been calculated that a fellah can live upon £3 15s. per annum, so that, roughly speaking, every Tommy Atkins is costing the country a sum which would keep 13 of their own people, and the present force consequently represents a native population of 200,000 people, kept at the charge of the State. Think of 200,000 Fellaheen, each legitimately entitled to another wife, and compelled to contribute to the support of Tommy Atkins instead! Think that the mere house-rent of the Lieutenant-General Commanding would support nearly 300 more, and then ask if we are likely to be very popular!

The splendid weather of the past six weeks has been succeeded by severe storms. The 3rd Hussars, under canvas on Swan Inn Plateau, have suffered severely. Much damage was done, the marquee used as an officers' mess tent having been carried away bodily.

Though no official announcement on the subject has been made, the following regiments will probably arrive here, at an early date, to be stationed during the winter:—2nd Battalion 21st Royal Scots Fusiliers, from Dover; 2nd Battalion 60th Rifles, from Winchester; 73rd Highlanders, from Portsmouth.

Minor operations are dying hard. The general expectation was that the Northern and Southern Armies would, in accordance with the customs of the good old times, retire into their cantonments for the winter; but yesterday they were again under arms, to work out the following idea:—"A force sent from an entrenched camp at Brookwood Station has collected supplies for that place at Aldershot. The commander of a hostile (Northern) Army Corps hears of this, and detaches a force to intercept it." Northern Commander, Lieutenant-Colonel Field, 15th Hussars; Southern Commander, Lieutenant-Colonel Hale, 26th Cameronians; Umpire-in-Chief, Colonel A. H. Williams, Commanding R.A.

The "Remarks" by the General Commanding, or Umpire-in-Chief, on each field-day or minor operation have recently been discontinued. These interesting and instructive memoranda, read by every one with profit for many years, are now, it is said, for private circulation only!

A Battery, 1st Brigade, Royal Artillery, five officers, 90 non-commissioned officers and men, proceeded yesterday from the Camp by the 9.55 a.m. train to Portsmouth Dockyard, and embarked in the Euphrates for Bombay, viâ the Cape.

"A" Troop, Royal Engineers, arrived at Aldershot from Egham on Monday, on completion of the annual course of bridging and barrel-piering.

C (Telegraph) Troop, Royal Engineers, will probably proceed to Chatham at an early date, and remain there during the winter months.

Brigade-Surgeon Carter has assumed medical charge of the third station hospital, North Camp, vice Surgeon-Major Owen Owen; Surgeon Ryan, medical charge of officers, women, and children, North Camp, vice Surgeon-Major Cuffe, C.B.; Surgeon-Major Hyde, medical charge of officers, women, and children, South Camp, vice Surgeon-Major Waghorn; Surgeon-Major Smith, medical charge of the Cavalry Brigade. The officers who have been relieved in these duties will shortly proceed on foreign service. Surgeon-Major F. B. Scott, M.D., C.M.G., and Surgeon-Major C. A. Atkins, are under orders for foreign service. The order for Surgeon-Major Ruttledge to hold himself in readiness for foreign service is cancelled.

NAVAL PRIZE-MONEY.

We have received from the Admiralty a return setting forth the "receipt and expenditure of Naval prize, bounty, salvage, and other moneys between April 1st, 1882, and March 31st, 1883," of which the following is a résumé:—A balance of £54,000 remained in hand on April 1, 1882. Of this sum, £44,000 had been transferred to the Consolidated Fund since April, 1862, leaving a balance in the hands of her Majesty's Paymaster-General of £10,269 4s. 11d., less outstanding bills amounting to £87 1s. The Government per-centage up to April, 1882, amounted to £11,093 8s. 11d. The balance of unclaimed prize-money was £4,036 18s. 5d., and of forfeitures by reason of desertion, &c., £1,841 13s. 8d. The balance arising out of the proceeds of the sale of certain vessels was £13,438 10s. 5d. There had been returned from the sums placed to the credit of certain vessels, viz., the Dryad, commission 1879, £497 0s. 2d.; the Eclipse, commission 1880, £624 9s. 2d.; the London, commission 1880, £4,923 8s. 2d.; and the Seagull, commission 1879, £174 13s. 1d. These sums, together with the £13,438 above mentioned, amounting in all to £36,630, have been transferred to the Consolidated Fund, and, in addition to the £173,000 transferred prior to 1855, remain available for any claim on account thereof which the Naval prize-cash balance may not be sufficient to meet. The balance in hand on March 31 last was £30,164 3s. 2d. The amount distributed and paid during the past financial year out of the said balance was £6,465 18s. 10d. The ships who participated were the Dryad, Eclipse, London, Lynx, Seagull, Spartan, Vestal, and Wild Swan. To the balance in hand on March 31 last, £30,164 above mentioned, have to be added several small sums remaining in hand from grants made in former years, which, in our opinion, should long since have been distributed among those entitled to the prize-money. There is a balance of £3,086 odd from moneys recovered from the owners of certain merchant vessels for salvage services rendered. Another item is a balance of £4,084 odd remaining over from the Parliamentary grant for the destruction of pirates. The booty captured in Pegu leaves still £892 odd in hand. The China booty, captured in December, 1857, £1,160 odd. The balance of the Parliamentary grant for special service on the China station is £5,864 odd. The balance from the proceeds of the sale of certain junks, captured for breach of the blockade of the Canton River, is £1,117 odd, which the Blockading Squadron can surely claim. From the Indian Mutiny there remains in hand £309 odd belonging to the Shannon, and £449 odd belonging to the Pearl. There is also a balance of £7,081 due to the capturers of the stores at Kertch and Yenikale during the Crimean war. The Magdala booty proceeds have all been divided, except the small sum of £6 odd, and the balance due on ships captured and sold for breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act amounts to £185 odd. This brings the balance in hand up to £60,869 12s. 1d., of which but one-tenth has been distributed in prize-money to "poor Jack." It would be very difficult, indeed, to fairly apportion the remaining £54,269; but it could not be applied to better use than that of increasing the moneys at the disposal of the Seamen and Marines Widows' Pension Fund. The London is now the only ship whose captures amount to any considerable sum. Her boats last year made twenty captures, amounting in value to £10,682 7s. prize-money, a sum well worth securing, even at the risk entailed by boat-cruising on the East Coast of Africa.

Reviews.

There are critics who seem to judge of the importance of a battle solely by the amount of the slaughter produced on both sides. If that line of argument were to hold good, the recent battle at Tel-el-Kebir would sink into a little affair. The number killed and wounded was ridiculously small, but the results were decisive. In the battle of St. Thomé, fought by the French, the French numbered 230, with 700 Sipáhis; their loss did not exceed 20 men, but the battle changed the face of Southern India completely. The main object of Colonel Malleson's work is to describe the steps by which the English, after subduing their European rivals, conquered the several races which inhabit India. Each chapter describes the particular battle which gives it its name, and it is linked informally, but very really to the chapter which precedes it. In the preface, the reader will find many pages of highly interesting matter, particularly a sketch of the career of Joseph Davey Cunningham, the author of "The History of the Sikhs," which incensed Lord Dalhousie by its candour, and caused the death of Cunningham, for Cunningham had lived with the Sikhs for eight most important years of their history. The book appeared in 1849, and told plainly the whole unpalatable truth regarding the first Sikh war, the real strength of its army, the conduct of and the negotiations with the Sikh chiefs, and other matters which indirectly reflected on Lord Dalhousie. He removed Cunningham from his appointment at Bhopal, and the latter died of a broken heart. Colonel Malleson's descriptive power is considerable, and he has strengthened it by frequent extracts from important works. In all probability, the concluding chapter will prove most attractive to general readers. The battles described in it were critical in the extreme. Colonel Malleson, who frequently speaks disparagingly of Lord Gough, thus describes him:—

> "Lord Gough belonged essentially to a 'fighting caste.' In the presence of an enemy, he could only think of how to get at him; at that time of supreme excitement, all ideas of strategy, of tactics, of the plan of a campaign had vanished from his mind. How a momentary triumph might be obtained became his dominant and fixed thought. On the occasion of which I am writing, a calm and cool leader would have rejoiced to see an enemy abandoning, in the face of a military demonstration, a splendid military position, and retreating to a country where supplies were difficult, and where he could not control the ruler of Kashmir. He would even have aided him by making the demonstration more pronounced. But no thought of that had ever entered the brain of Lord Gough; he had joined and placed himself at the head of the advanced party of cavalry that morning unknown to the majority of his staff, and he now saw the 'enemy retiring without his striking a blow.' Little recked he of the fact that his own advanced party was few in numbers, that he had left the main body of his troops behind him without orders and without a head; he thought of nothing but that the enemy were escaping him when they were within measurable distance of his small force. Rendered wild at this thought, he dashed his cavalry and horse artillery at them as they were crossing the ford."

Colonel Malleson's very attractive work on the Decisive Battles of India will form a valuable addition to the military history of England.

The Edinburgh (formerly Majestic), at Portsmouth, will go out of harbour on Tuesday next, to undergo a progressive series of steam trials, in charge of the contractors, Messrs. Humphreys and Tennant. The trials, which will continue over a week, will commence at a low rate of speed and gradually work up to full power, and are to determine the amount of friction resistances, the relation of revolutions to speed, and the proportion of fuel consumption to horse-power at various speeds. The ship will subsequently be "rolled," to determine her metacentric period, and tested to ascertain the effect of her water-chambers, singly and in conjunction, in checking rolling.

On Wednesday, Mr. Durston, Chief Engineer of Portsmouth Dockyard, proceeded to Cowes, under Admiralty direction, to witness a trial of a small surface condenser which has been patented by Mr. H. Guy, and said to be suitable for steamboats of all descriptions. The point in which it differs from similar apparatus is its extreme simplicity and novel arrangement of tube plates, by which unskilled persons are enabled to take the condenser to pieces in a few minutes for the purpose of cleaning. Yacht-owners complain of the rapid deterioration of the boilers in their steam launches in consequence of the use of salt water. The condenser returns to the boiler fresh water, a very small amount being carried to make up for waste at drain-cocks, &c.

ARMY NOTES.

Such adjutants of Militia as, not being seconded, are retained on the establishment of their battalions, are, by a General Order issued this month, exempted from the payment of subscriptions to their Line battalions.

An estimate for £500,000 has been issued as the amount required in the year ending March 31, 1884, as an instalment of a grant in aid of the expenditure incurred by the Government of India upon the war in Afghanistan in the year 1878-1880.

The Government of India have, it is said, not accepted the recommendation of the Horse Guards as to the formation of the "Departmental Corps."

A correspondent writes:—"During a short visit to London, I saw several soldiers of Line regiments walking about the streets, and at the Fisheries, in tunics, but without waist-belts. Need I remark further upon this slovenly appearance? Our friends the Thuringians were conspicuous for their soldier-like appearance. I also observed many soldiers, both Guards and Linesmen, smoking. Now, if there is a regulation against smoking in the streets, why is it not enforced? But why should not the regulation be altered, so as to allow our soldiers to smoke in the streets after certain hours? It would be one way of keeping them out of public-houses, as at present, if a man wishes to have a smoke when out walking, he is compelled to go into a pot-house for it."

It is stated that the post of Military Knight of Windsor is given to officers who are "old and infirm." A correspondent asks, "Would those Purchase officers who were compulsorily retired on account of age be eligible for the asylum at Windsor?"

The Secretary of State for War has, with the approval of the Registrar-General, made a new arrangement for receiving every information of the deaths of pensioners from the Army and Navy. The registrars of births and deaths throughout the kingdom have been requested to ascertain whether the persons whose deaths they may be called upon to register have been in receipt of an Army or Navy pension or annuity, and, if so, to record the fact in the column provided for the "description," together with a statement of any honours or distinctions which may have been conferred upon the deceased person in special circumstances, such as the Victoria Cross, annuity for meritorious service, &c. Before registration the certificate of identity which every pensioner is provided with must be produced, and to the informant producing it the registrar has to pay the sum of 1s. A stamped certificate of the death is then to be forwarded, with the certificate of identity, to the Secretary of State for War, who will thereupon pay the registrar's fee of 2s. 6d., and also the 1s. allowed to the informant. This arrangement does not apply to commissioned officers.

The eight additional 12-ton guns ordered to be mounted at the Garrison Point Fort have arrived at Sheerness from Woolwich Arsenal, and will be at once placed in position.

By the last returns published, it appears that a great decrease has taken place in the consumption of strong drinks by the European soldiers in India, and that there is a corresponding spread of sobriety among the rank and file of the Army there. In the year 1877-78 the total consumption of rum among British troops in India was 253,254 gallons, whereas in 1881-82 it fell to 149,801 gallons. Comparing the same years as regards beer-drinking, the figures are, respectively, 76,942 and 74,747 hogsheads. Thus it will be seen that though the consumption of rum has decreased, that of beer has not increased.

Major-Gen. Sir Andrew Clarke, Inspector-General of Fortifications, has returned to the Horse Guards, from an inspection of the forts and defences on the south coast. On Tuesday, Sir A. Clarke, accompanied by Messrs. Bannister and Carey, the engineers of the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway, visited the works now in progress for materially extending the harbour at Newhaven.

The Queen has approved of Major-Gen. H. A. Smyth, R.A., commanding the Woolwich District, proceeding to Belgium for the purpose of being present at the Belgian autumn manœuvres, which commenced on Sept. 2. Lieut. the Hon. A. H. Henniker, major of the Coldstream Guards, has been selected to accompany him. The troops taking part in these manœuvres will comprise the 3rd and 4th Divisions of the Belgian Army, and promise to be of the most interesting nature.

Baker Pasha, commanding the Egyptian Constabulary and Police Force, has notified by a General Order, dated Aug. 23, that all officers who joined the force before June 1 will have to pass the examination in Arabic as set forth in the conditions of service, under the head of languages, by the end of the current year. The examination will be on the same lines as that lately held for the Egyptian Army officers. Every officer going up for examination will be required to answer correctly at least one-half of the questions, i.e., the decimal for passing the examination must be at least 0·5.

Notice is given by the Department of the Accountant-General of the Navy that the distribution of the tonnage bounty awarded for three slave-dhows, the Machasey, Malavia, and name unknown, captured on Oct. 12, 1882, by H.M.S. Undine, will commence on Friday, the 14th instant, in the Prize Branch of the Department of the Accountant-General of the Navy and Comptroller of Navy Pay, Admiralty, New Street, Spring Gardens, S.W.

The Standard says:—"In reference to the Military competitive examination of Lieutenants of Militia for commissions in the Line, we are asked to state that in addition to the 40 appointments in the Cavalry and Infantry, to be competed for on the 19th and 20th inst., 10 commissions in the Cavalry only will be offered to the unsuccessful but qualified candidates, in order of merit."

CHOLERA.—Appalling as are the reports from Egypt, how few think of our enormous annual sacrifice of valuable lives from scarlet fever, measles, and small-pox. All heads of families should insist upon the daily use, in bed-room, bath-room, and nursery, of WRIGHT'S COAL TAR SOAP, the only true and simple preventive of infectious disease, and a certain cure of all disorders of the skin.

From the Montreal Gazette we learn that, on the departure of Lieut.-Gen. Sir P. L. MacDougall from Halifax to the mother-country, an address from Col. Dyde, C.M.G., A.D.C. to the Queen, late Commandant of the Active Force, and the officers of his staff, tendering the sincere respect and esteem they entertained for him as a soldier and a gentleman, and an assurance that they never could forget his many acts of kindness and consideration towards them during the tenure of his office as Adjutant-General of Militia, was prepared, but owing to misinformation as to the date of his leaving, the address had to follow him to England. A reply has been received expressing his sincere pleasure and gratification, adding there was no period of his life to which he looked back with more pleasing recollection than the time when he was officially connected with the Militia of Canada.

The Cairo correspondent of the Egyptian Gazette writes:—"I am afraid that in my account of the Cholera Hospital at Abbasseeyeh I have not given sufficient credit to the officers of the 2nd battalion of the Egyptian Army for the work they have done there. Dr. Acland has most disinterestedly pointed out to me that he only took possession of the hospital when the hardest part of the work, namely, the start, had been done, and he thinks that I have given him far more credit than is due to him. I am sure that it affords me great pleasure to repair this omission, and to bear testimony to the kind, able, and untiring way in which the English officers in Egyptian service have attended on their men during the present outbreak of cholera, without the least consideration for their own health or comfort. Gen. Grenfell, Major Haggard, and Major Chamley Turner have given a vast amount of personal supervision to the work, and neither by night nor day have they hesitated to look after the sick and nurse them, as long as life remained; and no one but Major Wingate, the Hospital Commandant, and Surgeon-Major Rogers, Dr. Acland's predecessor, can have the smallest idea of the amount of anxiety and the infinite pains which they have taken to get the place into its present satisfactory condition. The work of all these officers is worthy of the service to which they belong, which is the highest praise I can give them. Great credit is also due to those Egyptian officers who, like Dr. Acland's colleagues at the Red Hospital, have, in spite of great obstacles, bravely stuck to their work."

In consequence of several claims arising out of the Egyptian campaign, the Governor-General has issued a notification that as the Army departments are maintained in view of war, no claims for bonus can be officially recognised.

Messrs. Cammell and Co., of the Cyclops Works, have recently received orders to supply sample plates for experimental purposes from the Governments of Denmark and of the United States. The members of the U.S. Ordnance Board, under the presidency of Comdre. E. Simpson, recently visited the works near Sheffield.

Good-service pensions have been conferred on the following Indian officers, with effect from the dates specified, viz.:—Col. H. C. Dowker, Madras S.C., from Dec. 10, 1882, in the room of Col. J. Michael, C.S.I., succeeded to the colonel's allowance; Col. T. S. Hawks, Madras S.C., from Dec. 29, 1882, in the room of Col. A. R. Clephane, succeeded to the colonel's allowance; and Deputy-Surg.-Gen. C. Smith, M.D., C.B., Indian Medical Service, Madras, from Jan. 18, 1883, in the room of Col. C. E. Bates, succeeded to the colonel's allowance.

"X. Y. Z." writes:—"I am sure you are strongly opposed to the desecration of the statue of the Iron Duke, i.e., to consign it to the melting-pot,—a statue which so many of us (not being great judges, perhaps, of what it termed artistic merit, or, indeed, caring to become so) have gazed at with affection from our earliest infancy. May I be permitted to suggest, through the medium of your columns, that before such a melancholy contingency, an appeal should be made to the Army at large to buy the figure, and appoint a committee of senior officers, past and present, to select a spot for our hero to rest upon. I am only a captain of limited means in a marching regiment, but I will willingly subscribe £10 10s. towards such an object; and I can't help feeling confidant that a very large proportion of my brother officers of the Regulars, and even those in the Militia and Volunteers, would willingly join to attain such a desirable end, and thus to preserve the original memorial to all time of a man who, in the words of a well-known historian, was the grandest, because the truest, whom modern times have produced, and who was the wisest and most loyal subject that ever served and supported the English Throne." [We are informed that the Government authorities have caused it to be understood that they will not sell the statue. To the pot it must go.—ED. A. & N. G.]

EDUCATION IN MARINE SCHOOLS.

"A Poor Marine, with a Large Family," writes to say:—"I am a married man, with a family of five children, four of whom attend the Marine School at Forton, where, until lately, they have been educated for nothing. But there is a change now, for the other day my eldest boy came home and told me that the schoolmaster had ordered them all to buy copy-books for their home lessons, and, if they did not, he would cane them and keep them in as well. Now, I should like to know what authority he has for doing this; because Government allows enough, or used to. There was never any lack of material under the other schoolmaster. There is a very strong feeling here about the matter. A copy-book does not cost much, but when you have to buy four—and many of us will have to buy six or seven—it comes very heavy; besides, I object, on principle, to pay, because everybody knows the books are supplied. If the children of men who have left the Marines on pension or otherwise were discharged from the schools, as the Regulations say they are to be, the material which they use would supply our children. There are over 30 children still attending the schools (mostly those of non-commissioned officers who have gone on pension), but I will only give one case. Two colour-serjeants were discharged in November last, and both are now employed in the dockyard at 30s. a week, besides pension; each of them has still three children attending school. There are many more besides, but I mention these in particular, as I would like to know how it is that the schoolmasters dare to allow them to remain, and so keep other children out of the schools who want to get in, and make us pay for books. I suppose they get something by it, or it would not be done, as they must know it is illegal."

The Duke of Connaught will hand over the command of the 3rd Infantry Brigade at Aldershot on the 30th inst. to Major-Gen. Feilding.

Their Lordships desire me to convey to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men who were so employed their approbation of the manner in which those delicate and important duties were performed, and to make known to them the high value placed on their services by the Irish Government."

60th, King's Royal Rifle Corps. The 2nd Batn., at Winchester, is expected to be moved shortly to Aldershot.

68th Durham Light Infantry. Capt. Wiehe has been appointed a Deputy-Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. for Musketry on the Bengal Establishment, vice Major Roupell, 70th Regt., resigned.

70th East Surrey Regiment. Major Roupell has resigned his appointment as Deputy-Assist.-Adjt. and Qrmr.-Gen. for Musketry in India.

71st Highland Light Infantry. Major Wilson is ordered to join the depôt for two years. Major de Lancey rejoins head-quarters in Ireland.

73rd, Black Watch (Royal Highlanders). The regiment is expected to be moved shortly from Portsmouth to Aldershot.

75th Gordon Highlanders. At a meeting of the Aberdeen Town Council on Monday, the following letter to the Lord Provost from Lieut.-Col. Hammill, C.B., commanding the regiment, dated Cairo, Aug. 20, was read:—"The officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the 1st Batn. Gordon Highlanders under my command having resolved to erect a memorial to those of their comrades who were killed or died of wounds and disease in the Egyptian campaign, 1882, I have the honour to request that you will lay this letter before the Town Council of Aberdeen, that they may be pleased to take into consideration whether a site for this memorial could be granted in Duthie Park, Aberdeen, which is considered the most desirable situation for such a memorial." The proposed monument will be in the form of a cross in granite; height, 14 ft.; base, 4 ft. 8 in. wide. The matter was remitted to a Committee, and the Lord Provost remarked that the request would no doubt be granted.

87th Royal Irish Fusiliers. The details, about 400 strong, which will remain at Aldershot on the departure of the regiment for India early next week will be attached to the 3rd Rifle Brigade, North Camp, until the arrival of the 89th from India.

91st (Argyll and Sutherland) Highlanders. The regiment moves from the Cape to Natal, and not to Ceylon, as originally intended.

Commissariat and Transport Staff. "A. Z." suggests that the same system should be applied to the Commissariat and Ordnance Store Departments as is in vogue in the Indian S.C., viz., promote officers to the rank of assistant-commissary-general after a certain number of years' service. The departmental proper D.A.C.G.'s could not justly complain, for beyond all doubt many of them are far too young, both as regards age and service, to rank as majors in the Army. These officers, too, received the relative rank of captain, on the reorganisation of the Departments in 1880, far sooner than they ever anticipated when they first joined, and having enjoyed the rank, with the extra pay and allowances attached to it, during this period, I cannot see that they would be undergoing any hardship. Take an average of, say, 14 years, and when any D.A.C.G. reaches that amount of service, promote him. Should the ranks of the assistant-commissary-generals become reduced from the present establishment, as naturally they would, the senior D.A.C.G.'s should be capable of performing the duties of senior officers at a station, with extra-duty pay. If not, by all means rid the Army of their services as rapidly as possible, for they will be no more capable of holding a higher rank. It is presumed, from the Royal Warrant now in force, that the two above-named Departments will be officered from the Royal Artillery and Line, therefore if length of service becomes the means of promotion, with an examination as to fitness, I think much of the present friction will be removed, and the Departments placed on a far more satisfactory footing.

Medical Department. The Morning Post has reason to believe that it is the intention of the War-Office to recommend Surg.-Gen. J. Irvine for the Bath. At the end of last year, Dr. Irvine relinquished the appointment of head of the Sanitary and Statistical Branch on the head-quarters staff, and proceeded to Egypt, and during the prevalence of the epidemic in that country has been indefatigable in his attention to the sick. The whole of the officers of the Army Medical Department and the Army Hospital Corps, will, it is understood, be specially recognised.

Pay Department. During the current month, Capts. A. H. Haldane, from Aug. 30, 28 years' service; T. C. A. Fox, from Sept. 2, late 49th Regt., 18 years' service (served in the Egyptian Campaign); H. W. Phillips, from Sept. 2, late 50th Regt., 20 years' service; C. C. Budd, from Sept. 2, late 94th Regt., 18 years' service; B. H. Burge, from Sept. 6, late 47th Regt., 29 years' service; W. D. Graham, from Sept. 16, late 105th Regt., 15 years' service; S. D. Crookenden, from Sept. 18, formerly in the 65th Regt., 17 years' service; G. H. Turner, from Sept. 20, late 17th Regt., 27 years' service; J. G. Anderson, from Sept. 28, formerly in the 64th and 87th Regts., 27 years' service; and M. R. Healy, from Sept. 28, late 97th Regt., 21 years' service, will be promoted to the hon. rank of major, on completion of five years' service in the department. The Indian Government has determined that officers who have attained the rank of Staff Paymaster shall no longer be eligible to hold the position of paymasters of battalions and regiments in India.

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

Royal Scots Fusiliers. Lieuts. Salmonson, Shortt, Scott, and Younger, 3rd Batn., have passed their examination and obtained certificates in the class at the Aldershot School of Instruction concluded on August 31.

In addition to the forty appointments in the Cavalry and Infantry to be competed for on the 19th and 20th inst. by lieutenants of Militia, ten commissions in the Cavalry only will be offered to the unsuccessful but qualified candidates, in order of merit.

A "Serjt.-Major" thinks that non-commissioned officers of his class are excluded from the benefit of the Royal Warrant of July 29, 1882, by paragraph 806 of the Regulations for the Militia, as it does not agree with the pay and non-effective pay clauses of the Warrant of 1881 as amended in 1882 (clause 165, Army circulars).

THE VOLUNTEERS.

3rd Glamorgan Rifles was inspected on Monday, by Col. Barnes, 41st Regimental District, at Swansea. The total number of all ranks on parade was 436. At the conclusion of the drill, Col. Barnes congratulated the corps upon its smart and soldier-like appearance. He was very much pleased also with the manner in which the various evolutions were performed.

At the examination for admission to the Staff College to be held in June next, the military history and geography required will be that embraced by Parts 1 to 5 of the "Operations of War," by Sir E. B. Hamley, which will be the text-book of examination.

The Irish Times says:—"It is anticipated that Longford will cease to be occupied as the head-quarters station for a cavalry regiment, and is likely to be occupied by a troop only in future, the barracks not being suitable for the head-quarters of a regiment. It is more than likely that an infantry detachment will also be stationed at Longford in future, which will, in all probability, be furnished by the infantry battalion quartered at Mullingar, being the nearest head-quarters station occupied by infantry."

At the competitive examination to be held in July, 1884, for admission to the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and at the examination of lieutenants of Militia who are candidates for commissions in the Regular Army to be held in April, 1884, the examination in English literature will be limited to the following authors:—Spenser's "Fairy Queen," Book 1; Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice" and "King John;" Byron's "Childe Harold;" Bacon's Essays, 1 to 30, inclusive; Macaulay's Essays, "Burleigh and his Times;" "Life and Writings of Addison;" and "Frederic the Great." The examination in English history will be limited, at the candidate's choice, either to the period A.D. 1760 to 1790, inclusive, or to the period A.D. 1790 to 1820, inclusive. The candidate's reading in the period selected should include that part of Bright's history which treats of it.

Recent official returns give the following as the proportion of English, Scotch, and Irish soldiers in the British Army:—Cavalry—English, 7,668; Irish, 1,024; Scotch, 686. Royal Artillery—English, 11,565; Irish, 2,373; Scotch, 966. Royal Engineers—English, 2,633; Irish, 373; Scotch, 248. Infantry—English, 34,824; Irish, 11,970; Scotch, 4,650. Household Cavalry—English, 911; Irish, 90; Scotch, 198. Foot Guards—English, 4,260; Irish, 355; Scotch, 828.

According to the Egyptian Gazette, "The Egyptian Artillery, under Col. Duncan, R.A., made some capital artillery pratice a few days ago at their camp at Abbasseeyeh. Four batteries had been brought out,—No. I., 8 centimetre Krupp guns, Major Rundle in command; No. II., 8 centimetre Krupp guns, Major Ali Anoir Effendi in command; No. III., camel battery composed of Turkish bronze muzzle-loaders, corresponding to about 7-pounders, Major Parsons in command; No. IV., camel battery, Turkish bronze muzzle-loaders, corresponding to about our 7-pounders, Major Salah Rifaat Effendi in command. The batteries were drawn up in line, the mounted battery at full intervals on the right, the camel battery at half-intervals on the left. They came into action against a ruined village, at what was supposed to be an unknown range (about 1,300 yards), opened fire from right to left, firing 200 rounds with common shell, percussion fuse, and ultimately fired in salvos. The practice, considering the men had only been handling the guns for a few months, was generally good, some of the shots being remarkably true. Col. Duncan was on the range, taking careful note of the firing, Major Wodehouse commanded the batteries. Gen. Stephenson, attended by his military secretary, Col. Lorne Campbell, witnessed the whole proceeding, and expressed himself much satisfied at the performance of the young troops."

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1883.

THE Newfoundland Fisheries question necessitates, as explained in a previous article, the maintenance of three men-of-war on the coast of Newfoundland, and the importance of the service on which they are detailed is great. The question of treaty rights with regard to those Fisheries between France and England is complicated. It has severely taxed the ingenuity of statesmen in the past to come to a satisfactory solution of the difficulties connected with those rights. It will probably be a bone of contention for years to come, unless the two Governments apply themselves to come to an agreement. To properly understand the situation, we are forced to go back to the earliest annals of Newfoundland. Our difficulties may be said to have began in this quarter of the globe with the discovery of the island, in 1497, long before the Pilgrim Fathers settled in New England, and the Colonies from which were formed the United States were founded. About the year 1578, the city of St. John was laid out, and six years afterwards Sir Humphrey Gilbert took possession of the New Isle, in the name of Queen Elizabeth. In 1621, Lord Baltimore founded the first English colony, on the peninsula of Avalon, in the south-eastern extremity of the island. Simultaneously, the French founded settlements on the west and south coasts, planting their capital at Placentia. The whole coast still bears witness of their presence, most of the names of the capes, bays, and headlands being of French origin. In 1713, it was a question in dispute whether the island belonged to France or England. The Treaty of Utrecht settled it. By the thirteenth article, "The Island of Newfoundland, together with the adjacent islands," was "ceded to Great Britain by France, in full sovereignty." This treaty further provided that the subjects of France should be allowed "to catch fish and dry them on the land between Cape Bonavista and Cape Riche," or Cape Ray, as it is now called on our Admiralty charts. This gave the French the right of catching fish, and of salting and drying their catch, off and on a coast-line extending from the north-easternmost to the south-westernmost point of the island, passing round by the north and west. In 1763, this concession was confirmed by the Treaty of Paris, with this addition, that the islands of St. Pierre and Miguelon, off the south coast, were ceded to France, to enable the French fishermen to find shelter for their craft in bad weather. These islands are at present occupied by about 4,000 French subjects. By the Treaty of Versailles, made in 1783, the limits of the fishing-ground assigned to the French were fixed. It commenced at Cape St. John, on the north-east coast, and, passing by the north, descended by the west to Cape Ray. This excluded the French from that part of the coast lying between Cape Bonavista and St. John, embracing the fine Bays of Notre Dame and Bonavista, with the many fine harbours belonging to them. The Island is thus divided diagonally from north-east to south-west, the French having the right, concurrently with the English, to the north-west or upper part of its coast, which is equal to about one-third of the whole coast-line. The French, however, now claim the sole right of fishing in these waters, and not only deny the concurrent right of English and colonial fishermen to use these waters, but have gone the length of refusing to allow colonial vessels to use the harbours on that part of the Newfoundland coast. They have also driven the inhabitants inland from the shore, have claimed the right of closing three lobster-potting establishments founded by colonial enterprise, have stopped all mining, and have placed salmon nets at the mouths of all the rivers, in defiance of the laws of the Colonies. The harbour of St. Pierre is the yearly rendezvous of the French fishing fleet, which numbers, on an average, several hundred square-rigged vessels. These leave France in the early spring, and assemble at St. Pierre about April. They are then dispersed, and are dismantled in the numerous fine harbours which abound on the north-east and west coasts of Newfoundland. The crews, varying in number from 3,000 to 6,000 men, according as the prospects of the season are bad or good, then proceed to their work of catching codfish, in small craft fitted for the purpose. These men are under the immediate supervision of the French Naval officers on the station, who maintain strict discipline among them. Every temporary abode is under the immediate supervision of a "prud'homme," who is responsible to the senior French officer present for the behaviour of his men. The French Government naturally attach very great importance to this fleet as the nursery for their Navy. Hence, the fishing fleet is heavily subsidized, and were it not for this, it would hardly pay its expenses, owing to the increase in the population of Newfoundland, which has given rise to a most serious competition, added to that of the Norwegian Fisheries, which have the advantage of being nearer the European market.

The reduction of the Army of Occupation in Egypt to the strength of a Brigade will enable the Government of the Khedive to make the income and expenditure of the country balance each other, and very nearly to meet the deficit of £185,000 which was announced recently. Sir Auckland Colvin started last night on his way to India, and will meet Major Baring, at Cairo or Alexandria, and Sir E. Malet, to confer on the situation.

It has been found impossible to place on the Unemployed List those Lieutenant-Colonels of Royal Artillery on the Indian Lists who have completed five years' service at their respective commands. We presume a new Warrant will, therefore, be issued to meet these officers' case, for it is manifest that the authorities cannot allow the Lieutenant-Colonels on the "old list" to be deprived of their commands, and those on the other (Indian) Lists to continue serving, monopolising all the prizes, and stopping the road for juniors. The longer the evil exists, the greater will be the difficulty in removing it. It ought, therefore, to be faced at once, and some means devised for getting over it, before the mischief becomes too apparent.

The new Queen's Regulations define very clearly the lines of demarcation between the Brigade of Guards and the rest of the Army. Paragraph 54, "Compliments, &c.," lays it down that "officers of the Guards are not to be put on duty with men of the Line, nor are officers of the Line to be put on duty with men of the Guards." Paragraph 55 says:—"In performing the duties of the garrison or camp, they will be kept distinct as much as possible; but, under the immediate command of their own officers, they perform whatever duties are required of them under the orders of the Field-officer of the day." Paragraph 56 orders that, "whenever the Guards are in garrison and find the public duties, a Field-officer of the battalion will be detached as Field-officer of the day. Lieutenants and Captains of the Guards who are Brevet Majors will be on the garrison roster as Field-officer." Paragraph 57 rules that, "when the Guards are in garrison, and parade for trooping the colours, then a Brigade-Major or the Adjutant of the battalion inspects the duties, and hands them over to the Field-officer." Paragraph 54 says that officers of the Line are not to be put on duty with men of the Guards, and Paragraph 55 indicates that a Line Field-officer of the day may be put on duty with the Guards under his command. Paragraph 56, therefore, it may be presumed, relates only to occasions when the Foot Guards furnish the whole of the duties. Paragraph 57 has reference, of course, to occasions when the Field-officer of the day is of the Line. It seems to us that there is a want of clearness in Paragraph 54. It would surely be advisable to add the words, "Except as regards Line Field-officers of the day," for as the paragraph stands at present, though subsequent paragraphs lead one to suppose what is meant, the wording is misleading, and may result in misunderstandings which it is as well to avoid. The wording of this paragraph has been altered from that of the edition of 1881, in which it was stated that officers of the Line were not "to command" men of the Guards. The privilege of the Guards has, therefore, been lessened to some extent, we cannot help thinking with advantage, if the Guards and the Line are to work together. In Paragraph 40, Note †, at foot of page, it is ordered that the Guards shall present arms to Colonels of the Household Brigade, also to Lieutenant-Colonels of the Household Cavalry and to Field-officers of Foot Guards, also to an acting Field-officer in command of a battalion, but not to a Colonel of the Line in temporary command of a brigade in which they may be serving.

A correspondent informs us that though Sir F. Abel's father was a German, the eminent chemist was born and reared in England, and that his mother was an Englishwoman. Sir W. Siemens is a born German, but he has been naturalised as an English subject. We are inclined to think, however, notwithstanding this correction of our correspondent and his insistence on the fact that Sir W. Siemens made most of his discoveries in England, the Germans of Austria and of Fatherland generally will take pride to themselves on account of the German origin of one of the British Commissioners and of the German birth of the other British Commissioner to the Vienna Electrical Exhibition.

In consequence of what seemed to be trustworthy statements, that the Indian cadetships were subjected to certain influences which were more in accordance with the spirit of the old times of patronage and jobbery than with the principles which are supposed to direct the authorities now-a-days, we made some time ago certain comments which we had reason to consider justifiable on the system. Further and better information, and an authoritative contradiction, have led us to the conclusion that the criticism which we conceived it to be our duty to make in respect to the appointments in question was not fair, and that our animadversions on the action of the India Office were not borne out by the facts.

Much has been written lately about the paucity of officers in Militia regiments. How comes it, we wonder, that the 6th Battalion Rifle Brigade (Royal Longford Rifles), at its recent inspection, was under command of a Captain only, and that not the senior of his rank? The regiment has a Lieutenant-Colonel, a Major, and a senior Captain with the honorary rank of Major. None of these appears to have been present at the parade. Surely, at the annual inspection of a regiment, it should be compulsory upon every available officer to be present. What would be said of a Line battalion under similar circumstances?

We are very sorry we meddled with such an awful subject as the genealogy of the Camerons, for our paragraph last week has brought upon us the criticism of the professor of the family tree, who finds "the only Allan answering to the period between 1760 and 1820 was the son of Ludovic, who was the son of Ewen (1629-1718), by his third wife, Jean, daughter of D. Barclay, of Urie; whereas John, the direct ancestor of Lochiel, was the son of Sir Ewen, by Mary, daughter of Sir Donald M'Donald, of Sleat." "Shoulder to Shoulder," moreover, cannot think that to have been high in the confidence of George III. would have been held as an honour by any loyal Cameron of that reign. (Phew!) Perhaps he would tell us when the interesting change in the Camerons' views was effected which led to Lochiel being a Lord of the Bedchamber to George III.'s descendant, Queen Victoria? He denies the law-suit, and we give in on that point, and promise we will never run the risk of offending again; but our correspondent must pardon us for having entertained the belief that "the history of the Cameron family was of sufficient public interest" (in connection with the regiment) "for a paragraph in the Army and Navy Gazette."

In December, 1881, we published a roster of Lieutenant-Generals and Major-Generals for employment. Of the Lieutenant-Generals, Generals Macdonnell, Parke, Shipley, Colborne, and Elmhirst have been retired, and Generals Stephenson and Lord Alexander Russell have been employed. Generals Somerset and Street are, therefore, first for employment, but as they hold high positions on the List—one first, the other third—their chances of receiving appointments would appear to be somewhat remote. Of the Major-Generals, many have been retired, some for non-employment, others on account of age. The following have been employed, viz., Generals Sargent, Sayer, White, Willis, Walker, Earle, and Feilding. Those longest out of employment are Generals Rickman and W. K. McLeod. These two officers have both been for more than five years out of employment, but they enjoy the benefit of the rule by which those who are put on half-pay as Colonels may be seven years unemployed, instead of five years, the limit for an officer promoted to the "establishment" from full pay of his Colonel's rank. The officer next on the List for employment to General McLeod—he stands before him as regards seniority—is Major-General H. A. Sarel, C.B., who is about to be appointed to the governorship of Guernsey. General Sarel was Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General at Dover at the time of his promotion in 1878. He had only five years allowed him in which to obtain employment, and unless he had got something by December next, he would have had to go. Considering the valuable and varied nature of this officer's services, and that he was filling an important position on the Staff of the Army at the time he was advanced to General's rank, it appears strange that he should have been left in the cold so long.

The 9th German Army Corps, quartered in Schleswig-Holstein and neighbourhood, has lately received orders to be in readiness for rapid mobilisation,—that is, ready to march, in three or four days. Army Corps not having "beschleunigte Mobilmachungsordre" require from eight to ten days.

Boards for examination of officers and serjeants in musketry will assemble at Aldershot before the 17th inst. The candidates will be examined in Part I. of the "Syllabus of Subjects for the examinations required to qualify officers to conduct the musketry training of troops and companies." This is the last musketry examination that will be held under this Syllabus, and every officer who has not qualified will be specially reported on. The subjects are:—1. Communicating drill in the firing exercise and position drill. 2. Lecturing on the theoretical principles. 3. Catechising a squad on the rifle and its parts; how to clean it; and how to replace, in the field, mainsprings and strikers. 4. The use of the stadiometer. Serjeants will not be required to lecture, but must be acquainted with the information in the lectures. In addition to the requirements of a "2nd-class educational certificate," prior to April, 1882, the serjeants must also possess a knowledge of simple decimals.

When the 87th Fusiliers embark for India next week they will leave behind them nearly 400 men, who, for one reason or another, it is not considered desirable to send on foreign service. Four hundred men, half a battalion, unfit for service! What a comment on our "Military system"!

General Sir Daniel Lysons has been compulsorily retired, on attaining the age of 67 years. It happened that General Lysons had any amount of work left in him, and was doing most useful service at Aldershot, where his abilities were recognised by all those serving under his command. But the law laid it down that he must go, and he went. The retirement of Sir Daniel Lysons has caused those interested in the rules affecting promotion and retirement of General Officers, to ask themselves on what principle it is that there should be two sets of laws on this, to them, all-important subject. One General happens to be 67 years of age. "Oh," it is said, "he must go; it is not fair to other officers to retain him, as he delays their promotion, and we must have everything fair and above-board." But there are other General Officers who are holding appointments for which their rank disqualifies them,—Generals holding Lieutenant-General's commands, and Lieutenant-Generals Major-General's appointments, whilst others, long since over age, are returned as supernumeraries. All this tends to lessen the chances of the general body of officers of obtaining that employment which can alone save them from being compulsorily shelved. If the Royal Warrant is to be set aside to meet the cases of a favoured few, it ought to be so stated. At present, there is wide-spread discontent, for not a few consider that the existing rules for regulating promotion and retirement press with undue severity on the majority, and it is for the majority that it is always desirable to legislate in such matters.

Major R. C. Dudgeon, late Adjutant, 3rd Battalion, Royal Scots, has been appointed by the Home Secretary to the vacant office of Deputy Governor of her Majesty's General Prison at Perth.

Sir F. Roberts has received permission to convert two regiments into Pioneers, on the model of the 23rd and 32nd Bengal Native Infantry, and the fortunate corps are the 1st and 4th Regiments Madras Native Infantry. These lucky battalions are in future to be cantoned during peace time at either Bangalore or Secunderabad. Both regiments were in Afghanistan during the last campaign, and the 4th had got as far as Suez last year when Tel-el-Kebir settled their further opportunities for medal-hunting. Their commandant, Colonel Hodding, is at present at home on furlough, and Colonel Griffiths, late of the 35th Madras Native Infantry, which was disbanded, is acting energetically in his place.

Boadicea, Capt. Edmund Church, flagship of Rear-Admiral Noel Salmon, was at Simon's Bay on Aug. 14, with the Starling and Flora. The Opal was at Cape Coast Castle on July 3, and is about to visit various parts of the station. The Flirt was at Cape Coast Castle on July 3, and will remain on the Coast during the absence of the Opal. The Algerine was at Cape Coast Castle on July 3, and would proceed to the South Subdivision to relieve the Stork. The Alecto was at Cape Coast Castle on July 3, and would visit Lagos and intermediate ports, and return to Cape Coast Castle. The Bullfrog was at Ascension on June 14, and would proceed to Cape Coast Castle.

Canada, Capt. Durrant, arrived at Quebec on Sept. 5, with Prince George of Wales on board, all well. Writing from Halifax on the 15th ult., the correspondent of the Western Morning News says:—"We leave here to-morrow for St. John's, Newfoundland, and thence, after a short stay, proceed to Quebec, arriving there about the beginning of September. Our stay here has been very enjoyable, especially for those who have had the time at their disposal for appreciating the splendid walks and scenery round about Halifax; since our arrival we have had a refit and general clear up, after our long cruise, so are now in trim again. The Mallard arrived here from the north on the 7th inst., and sailed again on the 11th for Bermuda. A few courts-martial have been held on board the flagship. On the 8th, Watson, the gunner, who deserted from the Northampton last commission, was tried and adjudged to lose five years' seniority and be dismissed his ship; and I hear he will be tried again, as he is not satisfied with the sentence. On the same day, a seaman from the Dido was tried for theft, and another from the Mallard for desertion. Admiral Commerell gave a grand ball at his residence on shore on the 9th inst. The guests numbered about 250, and included Prince George of Wales and the officers of the Fleet. His Royal Highness has been a guest of the Admiral for the last few days. Another ball will be given by the Admiral on board the Northampton to-night. On Monday evening a grand promenade concert was given at the public gardens in honour of Prince George. The gardens were very prettily illuminated, particularly in the centre, where rows of Chinese lanterns were suspended from the flagstaff. Rockets and fire balloons were also sent up in abundance, and the band of the 101st Regt. played some choice selections during the evening. Dancing was freely indulged in in the covered rink by all classes. Prince George, accompanied by Admiral Commerell, Capt. Durrant, and some ladies, was escorted through the grounds by the authorities, and many were the eager inquiries as to which was Prince George. The older inhabitants appeared to be particularly proud in recalling the occasion of his Royal Highness's father's visit to Halifax, some 20 years ago. Picnics and fishing parties have been freely indulged in since our arrival, and our stay on this station so far promises to be a very pleasant one, and the crew of the Canada a very happy one."

Eclipse, Capt. Garforth, arrived at Sheerness on Saturday, bringing to a close a commission only marred by the collision with the Nereid on the voyage home. The Eclipse proceeded to moorings near the Dockyard. She was inspected by Vice-Admiral Rice on the 4th inst. Before leaving the ship Vice-Admiral Rice ordered the ship's company on the quarter-deck, and said:—"Capt. Garforth, I am very much pleased with my inspection of the Eclipse. The crew are a fine lot of men; the ship is very clean; the men are well drilled and very smart; the discipline, likewise, appears to have been very good." During a long commission the Eclipse has invariably borne a good name, and we congratulate Capt. Garforth in thus paying her off with éclat. The Eclipse was commissioned on Jan. 1, 1880, for service in the East Indies, and during her absence has steamed and sailed nearly 50,000 miles.

Heroine, Capt. F. Blackburn, was at Esquimalt, and will remain for the present.

Invincible, Capt. R. H. M. Molyneux, left Malta for the Piræus on Monday, where the Monarch and Carysfort were awaiting her arrival. They left on Sept. 4 for Nauplia, to rejoin the Squadron under Vice-Admiral the Lord John Hay. Mails to the care of Consul, Athens.

Opal, Capt. Arthur T. Brooke, senior officer on the West Coast of Africa, was at Kabinda on Aug. 11; would arrive at St. Helena with Squadron on Sept. 23.

Repulse, Capt. G. L. Sulivan, got up steam on Monday morning, and made preparations for her departure as Coastguard ship of the Humber district, but owing, however, to the violent gale, Capt. Sulivan was compelled to signal to the Commander-in-Chief at the Nore for permission to bank-up fires. Alfred Cummings, the able seaman who sustained serious injuries by falling from the topmast rigging the previous day, was conveyed to Melville Hospital, Chatham. He had recovered consciousness, and considering the nature of his injuries, was doing well. Lieut. Gray and Burgess, A.B., have been highly commended for the gallantry they displayed in rescuing Cummings.

Sappho, Com. B. Clarke, was at Esquimalt, and will accompany the Swiftsure south.

Woodlark, Com. Nesham, was at Muscat on Aug. 6, and would proceed to Jask on Aug. 7, to communicate by telegraph with the Political Resident at Bushire, then probably return to Muscat, and remain there until relieved by the Philomel. The Arab was at Bombay on July 30. The Philomel was at Bussorah on July 24.

COMMANDER BEST.

"Enquirer" wants us to ask several questions, which we may answer without referring to Commander Best. He was not on speaking terms with Commander Maxwell Heron. If he had blue-jackets up at his house doing his private work there, we do not see how the fact would absolve another officer, for two wrongs do not make one right. We do not know whether an officer can refuse to serve on a court, if he were ordered to do so; and if he did not volunteer, being determined to break his oath and do injustice, it is not easy to understand what "Enquirer" means by "the act of a gentleman."

THE GERMAN IRONCLAD SQUADRON.

The German squadron which retired from the Baltic when the Russian squadron commenced its manœuvres, and returned when the latter had terminated its cruise, has been engaged performing on the coast of eastern Prussia, carrying out the year's programme, of which the chief features are torpedo-boat attacks on a large scale, and practice with "fish" torpedoes. The squadron is constantly attacked by flotillas of swift torpedo-vessels stationed at various ports. The seamen and marines are armed with the Mauser magazine rifle, which is reported to have given greater satisfaction in their hands than it did with the Army. As was anticipated, events have proved that the repeater greatly adds to the waste of ammunition; but this drawback has not proved so serious in the Navy as in the Army, owing to the greater number of cartridges carried by the seamen when engaged on shore, and the comparative ease with which the expended ammunition can generally be replaced. It has been decided that the Navy is to be provided with magazine rifles by the end of next year. The torpedo experiments have not proved very successful, as is shown by the number of advertisements which are continually appearing in the Dantzig and other newspapers, offering rewards to fishermen and others for the capture of runaway "fish" torpedoes. On the whole, however, the manœuvres performed so far by the German evolutionary squadron appear to have given satisfaction at head-quarters. As much cannot be said of the late performances of the Russian squadron before the Emperor Alexander. It is reported that the latter has expressed himself utterly dissatisfied with both the plan and mode of carrying out the manœuvres, and that he has ordered the squadron to re-form in the autumn, for the purpose of having the manœuvres over again.

NAVAL NOTES.

Capt. Henry Kane, Naval Attaché, has returned to the Admiralty.

Capt. Pasley, having relinquished the command of the Champion on the China station, owing to ill-health, is succeeded by Capt. A. Powlett, who served in the China war of 1860. Capt. Pasley, it is expected, will be appointed to the Carysfort or the Superb.

An authoritative contradiction has been given to the statement that unexpected defects have been discovered in the hull of the Victoria and Albert, necessitating supplementary estimates. The estimate will not be exceeded; £35,000 will be spent in replacing unsound timber, and the remainder for improving engines and new boilers. The work will occupy till July next.

J. Rich, quartermaster, of the Stork; R. Phillips, shipwright, of the Indus; F. Colling, second-class ship's corporal, of the Swiftsure; W. Smith, leading stoker, of the Osprey; H. H. Whitell, gunner's mate, of the Cambridge; W. T. Hall, captain of the mizzentop, of the Excellent; M. Mahoney, carpenter's crew, of the Bittern; G. Parnis, bandsman, of the Superb; W. J. Smith, boatman, T. Duckham and F. Pyne, commissioned boatmen, of the Coastguard, have been awarded the medal for long service and good conduct.

A correspondent sends us a long article on Coastguard pay and pensions. He says:—"The Admiralty Instructions direct that men serving in the Coastguard on shore should be subject to the regulations of the Royal Navy, and that the various grades in the shore force have corresponding ratings afloat; but a great difference exists between the pay and pensions of men serving in relative ranks. In the Coastguard, there are 222 chief officers, whose corresponding rank afloat is that of warrant officer, but they receive no progressive pay, no outfit allowance, and receive but £1 per annum, instead of £1 10s., for seaman's time. The officer, or chief boatman-in-charge, ranks with chief petty officer, but is paid and pensioned as 1st-class petty officer, and he has to wear, at his own expense, the same uniform as a warrant officer. It is hard to force men on promotion to don, at their own expense, uniform which costs about £25, or close on four months' pay. Every other rank in the service receives proportionately less emoluments than their relative ranks afloat. A man on joining the Coastguard must relinquish ratings, gunnery pay, and the 2d. per day re-entry allowance for continuous service. On an average, 15 years afloat, including boy's time, are required to render a man eligible for the Coastguard. He is a very fortunate individual who has attained to the rank of station officer at 40. Forty-five is reached, and then he is ineligible for further promotion. He has then to serve 10 years for the pension. A man served the Crown 40 years, 18 years in the Navy and 22 in the Coastguard. He fought in two engagements, served in the Arctic regions, and joined the Coastguard with three medals. He served 12 years as a station officer, received two testimonials for saving life, and at the end of his time got a pension of £40. A brother who joined the Royal Irish Constabulary 16 years after the other had joined the Navy, was pensioned about the same time, and received £53. In the old Coastguard service, which was essentially a civil force, and not of such value to the country as the present force, which, in its capacity as First Naval Reserve, cannot be too highly estimated, the members received pensions almost double in amount to what is at present awarded, In reply to a question asked on the subject, the Secretary to the Admiralty gave as a reason for not granting the additional 2d. that life in the Coastguard was not nearly so dangerous as afloat. If this—and not economy—is the reason for not granting the extra 2d., why is it not given to the men when they are afloat annually? Often the men have £3 and more stopped from a month's pay. To this, too, must be added the wear-and-tear of clothes. The crews of stations on dangerous parts of the coasts are assembled at a particular place to await a cruiser. They are frequently lodged several days in a public-house. It argues well for the excellent conduct of the men that no breach of discipline has occurred under such circumstances. £25 allowed to Warrant Officers would form a most desirable aid to a chief boatman when first promoted, by enabling him to start in his new position without incurring debt. Progressive pay according to length of services cannot be too strongly urged. It is most unjustifiable that men, after lengthy and important services, should in their old age be set adrift with an inadequate income." [Our correspondent does not explain why it is that, with so many disadvantages, there are men willing to accept them in the Coastguard service.—Ed. A. & N. G.]

Orders have been received at Sheerness directing the Sphinx, 7, composite paddle steamer, 1,000 tons, 1,100 horse-power, built for the Government by Messrs. Green, of Blackwall, and specially constructed for the Persian Gulf, where she will be the senior officer's ship, to be ready for commission by Sept. 18. The Sphinx is a new vessel.

The Admiralty have appointed a committee, which is presided over by Admiral Sir W. H. Stewart, to assemble on board the Royal Adelaide, to draw up a scheme for an improved method of victualling, and the prevention of fraud. Capt. R. Carter and Pymr. J. Campbell, of the Royal Adelaide, Pymr. W. B. Hutchinson, of the Cambridge, and captains and paymasters of vessels now at Devonport are also among the members.

The unarmoured composite sloop Caroline, which was launched from the building slip at Sheerness Dockyard in November last, will shortly be removed into the stream for a series of trials on the measured mile, Maplin Sands. The Caroline will not be ready for the pendant before November.

The Pioneer, which was placed in the Chatham Steam Reserve on her return from the West Coast of Africa, has been found to be very defective, and it is not expected she will be again commissioned.

The Chatham Division of Marines are now being supplied with the new helmet. It has ventilating holes at the front and back, and the spike at the top is rounded off, instead of being pointed.

FRIDAY EVENING.

INDIA OFFICE, September 7, 1883.

Her Majesty the Queen has approved of the following admissions to the Staff Corps made by the Governments in India:—

Bengal Staff Corps.

To be Lieutenant:—Lieut. G. H. J. Moore, from the Royal Irish Regt. (dated June 2, 1880, but to rank from March 3, 1880).

Madras Staff Corps.

To be Lieutenants:—Lieut. D. W. Purdon, from the Durham Light Infantry (dated March 17, 1880, but to rank from Nov. 1, 1878); 2nd Lieut. A. Ffrench, from the Worcestershire Regt. (June 8, 1880).

Bombay Staff Corps.

To be Lieutenant:—Lieut. L. H. Vidal, from the Devonshire Regt. (dated June 2, 1880, but to rank from May 19, 1880).

The following appointments to the Staff have been made by the Governments in India:—Major F. C. Burton, Bengal S.C., to be a Brigade-Major, Bengal Establishment, vice Major A. L'E. H. Holmes (July 15); Major H. E. P. Thomas, East Yorkshire Regt., Deputy-Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. for Musketry, to be Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. for Musketry, Bombay Establishment, vice Col. W. A. Gillespie, Bombay S.C., retired; and Capt. W. A. Wetherall, Bombay S.C., to be a Deputy-Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. for Musketry, Bombay Establishment, vice Major Thomas (both dated July 5).

LIEUTENANT CONWAY GORDON, R.M.A.

"A Lover of Fair-play" writes to us, to complain that the paragraphs in which the case of this officer has been alluded to have been "guilty of a suppressio veri," &c., inasmuch as there was no mention in them of the fact that, when Mr. Conway Gordon, having failed to pass the examination for R.M.A., applied for a commission in the M.A., "Lieuts. Slessor and Cox were on the list of subalterns of the corps," and Mr. Gordon must, therefore, have allowed for their presence before him on the list. Ergo,—he had no right to be aggrieved by their being reinstated. But "A Lover of Fair-play" forgets that it was the failure of Lieuts. Slessor and Cox to pass the examination in 1882, which enabled the next best to claim the place in the list which their failure had left vacant.

The Turquoise, attached to the First Division of the Medway Steam Reserve, is ordered to be overhauled and repaired, preparatory to being commissioned for further service. The Turquoise was brought down from Chatham to Sheerness nearly six months ago, but owing to pressure of work in completing the Opal, Satellite, and Frolic for sea, she has not yet been taken in hand. She has had one previous commission on the Pacific station. Provision is made in the Navy Estimates for the completion of the vessel during the present financial year, her refit being estimated at £10,000.

The Myrmidon is ordered to be brought forward for commission at Sheerness Dockyard for surveying service, and is being fitted with new boilers. She is also to be fitted with a steam windlass for lifting the dredging apparatus, instead of the hand capstan in use during her former commissions.

The Admiralty will not begin their annual inspection of the Naval and Marine establishments at Portsmouth until Oct. 15.

Amusements.

The Lyceum, passing—during the absence of Mr. Henry Irving—under the management of that enterprising American speculator, Mr. Henry E. Abbey, has been reopened with Mrs. Lovell's adapted play of "Ingomar," in which Miss Mary Anderson, of Transatlantic fame, has made her first appearance in England as the Greek girl, Parthenia. On the first night, when the house was crowded by a very critical audience, a very natural nervousness prevented the young actress from doing full justice to her undoubted ability. Increased familiarity with the best modes of accommodating her voice to the size of the theatre, and of suiting her style to the requirements of an English auditory, will be found to have greatly improved her impersonation, and enable a better judgment to be formed of her powers. Personal advantages are greatly in her favour, and there is so much earnestness and intelligence in her acting, that the gifts conferred by Nature are seen to be set off to the best advantage by the acquirements of art. Miss Mary Anderson wins approval not merely by a pretty face full of expression, but by the power of commanding the sympathies of her audience. The various emotions Parthenia is called upon to convey during the five acts receive from the actress the clearest indication, and it is only when the certain falls and Miss Anderson has to accept general congratulations and complimentary bouquets that the illusion of reality is dispelled. Mr. J. H. Barnes represents Ingomar in a highly picturesque fashion, and Mrs. Arthur Stirling, Mr. W. H. Stephens, Mr. J. G. Taylor, and Mr. Howard Russell afford very adequate support in the other characters. The costumes are not only classically correct, but in some instances exceedingly becoming, and the several scenes are so exquisitely painted and so admirably arranged that merely for the pictorial beauty of its accessories, "Ingomar" at the Lyceum would establish a strong claim to the attention of all play-goers who can still enjoy the careful representation of a poetical play artistically illustrated. Miss Mary Anderson has certainly every reason to be delighted with her reception in this country.

At the Covent Garden Promenade Concerts, the famous British Army Quadrille, reproduced with all its original effects, has proved a great attraction. Miss Annie Marriott, Madame Fassett, and Mr. Walter Clifford have been this week included in the list of vocalists.

On Monday night, Mr. Burnand's burlesque drama of "Blue Beard" was reproduced at the Gaiety, and enabled Miss E. Farren, Miss Gilchrist, and other popular members of the company to resume their old positions. On Saturday afternoon Miss Kate Vaughan here takes her benefit, prior to a provincial tour, appearing in the old comedy of "The Country Girl," and an extravaganza by Mr. Reece on the subject of "Cinderella."

The Globe Theatre will be opened this evening (Saturday) by Messrs. Hollingshead and Shine with "The Glass of Fashion," by Mr. Sydney Grundy. Miss Lingard now appears in the prominent character.

The Comedy Theatre, where the opera of "Rip Van Winkle" has been played consecutively for nearly three hundred nights, will now be closed for a week, to allow the interior to be redecorated. In the meantime, the company will perform at Brighton.

THE MILITIA.

"A Militia Captain," who has served for 18 years, during 11 of which he had the command of a company, assigns as one reason of the unpopularity of the force "unjust charges for damages when the men are under canvas." During the late training, "the amount of barrack damages charged to each man was 2s., which, taking an average of 10 men per tent, represents £1 for the occupation of a tent for 27 days! In addition to this, there was the usual general charge of 1s., or 3s. in all, deducted from every man's bounty, when his account was closed and signed. I have (adds our correspondent) had some experience of our Militiamen, and have always found that this excessive charge causes more discontent than any other."

SPECTACLES v. BLINDNESS.—"One fourth of those suffering from dimness of sight or blindness can trace their calamity to the use of Spectacles indiscriminately purchased and unsuited to the sight. Mr. H. Laurance, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, 39 Old Bond Street, having made the adaptation of spectacles his especial and sole study for upwards of thirty years, personally adapts his improved lenses. Testimonials as to the success of Mr. Laurance's treatment have been received from Earl Lindsay, Sir George Henry Scott Douglas, Bart., Sir Graham Briggs, Bart., Sir Julius Benedict, F. D. Dixon Hartland, Esq., M.P., Lieutenant-General Macmullen, Brentwood, General Torrens, commanding Cork Division, Thomas Cook, Esq., the well-known Tourist Agent, &c. Pamphlet, "Spectacles: their Use and Abuse," post free. City Branches, 6 Poultry, Cheapside, and 22 Fenchurch Street, E.C.

Obituary.

Admiral R. Patton died at his residence at Fareham on Aug. 30. The gallant officer was born in 1791, and entered the Royal Navy on Feb. 1, 1804, as first-class volunteer, and when a midshipman on board the Bellerophon, on Oct. 21, 1805, took part in the battle of Trafalgar. He afterwards assisted in the capture of the French corvette Le Néarque, carrying 17 guns, and received post rank in 1827. He accepted retirement in 1847.

The Morning Post states that the "total number of French military officers in active service is at present nearly 14,000, including 400 generals. Among these no province is more numerously represented than Alsace-Lorraine, no less than 2,000 officers being natives of that now German province, including 26 generals of divisions and 59 of brigades, the best known among whom are Schneegans, Sumpt, Schramm, and Wolff. Besides these are about 100 Naval officers from Alsace-Lorraine in the French service, including Admirals Conrad, Krantz, and Pigeard. Especially during the last 10 years, the number of French officers from Alsace-Lorraine has increased more rapidly than during former periods."

The Government of India have sanctioned the erection of new barracks for the British infantry regiment at Mooltan.

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks, avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies, are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda water, will be found the least objectionable. Eno's Fruit Salt is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the powers of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use Eno's Fruit Salt, therefore no family should ever be without it. CAUTION.—Legal Rights are protected in every Civilised Country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d. Directions, in Sixteen Languages, how to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at Eno's Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—The Female's Friend.—So soon as the human functions are disordered, they should be rectified. It is a hopeless delusion to leave the malady to its own course. A few appropriate doses of Holloway's Pills at particular periods will prevent many a serious illness. They arrest all morbid influences, and prevent disease from extending and affecting more distant organs. Their primary action is upon the blood, stomach, liver, kidneys, and abdominal or pelvic viscera. Their secondary action strengthens the nervous centres. No drug can be at once so harmless, yet so antagonistic to disorders affecting the female sex. The most perfect reliance may be placed upon their purifying, regulating, and renovating virtues. They may be safely taken by females of all ages.

GENERAL SIR PATRICK M'DOUGALL may fairly be considered a high authority on the subject of Army organisation. He filled for many years an important appointment on the Staff at Head-quarters, and it was his privilege to enjoy, as he deserved to do, the confidence of the Secretary of State for War. He sat on various Departmental Committees, and as Chief of the Intelligence Department he was constantly consulted by Lord Cardwell, and he assisted in laying down the foundation of that system which for the last thirteen years has formed the basis of our Military organisation. When, therefore, Sir Patrick M'Dougall gives us the benefit of his ideas, the views he expresses should receive careful consideration. The General has contributed an article to the current number of the Nineteenth Century, in which he asks the pertinent question, "Have we an Army?" The inquiry is one in which the country ought to feel deeply interested. We have been endeavouring for the last thirteen years to build up a practical Military system. Have we succeeded? Sir Patrick thinks that "although matters are not quite so bad as the pessimists would have us believe, the present condition of the Army is not altogether satisfactory." This from Sir Patrick M'Dougall is an admission indeed. In a pamphlet, some months ago, Sir Patrick M'Dougall expressed the belief that the campaign in Egypt had "gloriously vindicated the soundness of the principle of short service." The only inference to be drawn from the passage we have quoted from his latest effusion is that he has lost faith in the principles of which a few months ago he was a champion. We do not blame him for having modified his views. When he wrote last year, Sir Patrick was absent from England. He was satisfied to judge, no doubt, from what he read. Tel-el-Kebir had been stormed and taken by what the public at home were led to believe were "young soldiers,"—boys, in fact. Not being on the spot to form an estimate for himself, Sir Patrick had been content to accept the assurances of others, and he pronounced his verdict in favour of a system which he was bound to consider "had fully vindicated the soundness of the policy of those by whom it was originated." But having been relieved of the duties of command, Sir Patrick has had time to look about him, and after mature deliberation, he has, with an honesty which does him credit, admitted openly before the world that there exist some grounds, at least, for the arguments put forward by the other side. Having made this admission, he goes on to formulate the reasons as concisely as possible which to his mind militate against the successful working of the Short-service system. "The Army," he says, "has been too much a battle-ground for party." That is very true. There can be no doubt that principally, if not wholly, the great mischief wrought by short service is due to party treatment. Nobody, we believe. would wish to see a return to long service. What we and others have all along contended is, that in order to bolster up a principle false in itself and damaging in its results, successive Governments have closed their eyes to facts, and have jeopardised the interests of the nation, by creating an idea of security when there is no security at all. The interests of the Army and the interests of the State are identical, and we fully agree with Sir Patrick M'Dougall in thinking no useful purpose is served by the attempts that are made to prove the contrary. "Many causes," Sir Patrick argues, "for which the Short-service system was in no way answerable, combined to produce what was called the 'break-down' during the Afghan and Zulu wars. But by far the most potent cause was the denial by successive Governments of the number of men requisite to work it." "The primary advantage of short service," it is contended, "is the formation of a Reserve." The necessity for a Reserve has never been questioned. What the opponents of short service have maintained is not that the system in itself is bad, but that a Reserve has been created at the expense of the first line. We hold that the experience of last year demonstrated that those who view with disfavour a system which renders it impossible to place one Army Corps in the field without weeding in the battalions proceeding to the front from 400 to 450 men physically unfit to bear the strain of active service have reason on their side. No amount of argument will lead practical soldiers to recognise merit in an organisation which fills the ranks with boys, in the place of men. Of what value are these striplings? They are little better than expensive incumbrances. They have to be housed, fed, and clothed. And yet, on an emergency, they would be left behind, and the chances are that before a third of them could be available the necessity for reinforcements would have passed away. The differences which exist between our own organisation and that of the Germans, it is to be feared, are not properly appreciated or understood. it is useless to hope to work our Army on the same lines as the German. The Territorial idea is sound enough in theory. But in practice, there is much to be said on the other side, as the statistics published by the War Office show. Sir Patrick is an advocate of the Territorial or double-battalion organisation. If our Army is Territorial, how comes it that we hear repeatedly of chopping and changing, of drafts sent from Highland regiments to English corps, and vice versâ? Until we reach that happy state when each District provides its full quota—if ever such a condition be arrived at—Territorialism must remain a principle in name. In order to carry out the idea, the whole Military fabric has been upset. We give those who were instrumental in introducing our present system the fullest credit for good intentions. At the same time, we are bound to take cognisance of facts. "The great difficulty," Sir Patrick M'Dougall observes, "of the Military organiser in England is the liability to the change of establishments from year to year which is due to Government by a popular assembly, and which more than any other cause disconcerts the working of any system." There is full justification for this assertion, as General M'Dougall shows by the establishments between 1872-73 and 1882-83. Sir Patrick then goes on to account for the unpopularity of the Army. The backwardness of men to prolong their service is attributed to a certain amount of discontent among soldiers "who are systematically overworked, as those of our own weak home battalions have recently been, without question." Here is an admission from a pronounced advocate of short service and a steadfast believer in the general policy of the War Office! What will the military writers in the Times say, when they find a recognised supporter of "progress" speaking thus openly? The opponents of our present Military policy have been complaining for years that home battalions were weak, and our young soldiers over-worked. "Rubbish!" has been the reply. "Look at the Report of the Inspector-General of Recruiting! Why, it distinctly states that the Army is only a few men under its establishment. How can regiments be under their strength?" But Sir Patrick M'Dougall, more straightforward, acknowledges that we have fallen short of numbers, and that our soldiers have been over-worked. Sir Patrick M'Dougall says:—"If the numbers enlisted in any year are to be taken as an indication, the Army must be twice as popular now, as when long service offered the inducement of pension." Why, of course, the Army attracts more recruits than it did, seeing what the inducements are. But the question is, what sort of recruits are they? Like all the rest of the reformers, Sir Patrick M'Dougall is very inconsistent. Only a short time back, he published the pamphlet referred to above, in which it was held that the new system was a huge success, and that those were pessimists who failed to recognise and admit its merits. We now find him not only agreeing in all the more important particulars with these pessimists, whom he so recently condemned, but actually suggesting changes which, in his opinion, will tend to remove the shortcomings of which complaint has been made. And what form are these changes to take? They are the very modifications which the Army has been advocating all along, viz., an increase of the strength of the weaker home battalions, to the extent required to make them efficient both as duty battalions and feeders for their battalions abroad, no battalion at home to be under 700 rank and file; secondly, inducements to be offered to men who have quitted the colours during the last three years to return to the ranks; thirdly, the diminution of the Army Reserve, which would result from the last measure, to be made up by an increase of the Militia Reserve; and fourthly, the recommendation of Lord Airey's Committee to be acted upon, serjeants being allowed the absolute right to serve on for pensions. After reading Sir Patrick M'Dougall's paper, all we can say is that if he has not given way and become a convert, no man ever did yet. We do not in any way blame him for the part he has played. His paper throughout bears the impress of truth and sincerity; and on this ground, if no other, it deserves to be carefully perused by those who are interested in this all-important subject.

ADMIRAL of the Fleet Sir Thomas Symonds is in one respect like the gallant Kempenfeldt—"his sword is in his sheathe, his fingers hold the pen"—and we are very glad, indeed, that the similarity ends there, and that Sir T. Symonds is above water, for the Admiral's literary essays are frequently instructive and are sometimes very amusing. At one time we were favoured by the Admiral of the Fleet's weekly efforts—indeed, we believe it was in the Army and Navy Gazette he first "threw off," so to speak, when he set out on his cruise against the French on paper—but having unwittingly provoked the veteran's wrath by permitting our Paris correspondent to reproduce some criticisms from those horrible French newspapers on the Admiral of the Fleet's statements, the gallant officer—forgetful of our columns of type devoted to his cause, and the great arrays of tables, "terrible as an army with banners" set forth in our pages, which he had prepared for the warning of a heedless generation and for the awakening of a stolid and incompetent Administration—gave us one withering broadside, cast off his grappling irons, and bore away to carry his cargo of "prophetic woe" to another port. He has now got plenty of sea-room, and beats to quarters regularly on board one of our contemporaries. Night and day the Admiral of the Fleet is haunted by visions of the most distressing character, of battle, murder, and sudden death, for which the only remedy is copious applications of pen, ink, and paper to his favourite organs. The Admiral of the Fleet does not share the opinion of the ancients of this Isle, who held that "on one pair of British legs do march three Frenchmen." On the contrary, he seems to think that it takes two British tars to tackle one "Crapaud." "We must have a Navy double that of France," he cries. "He blows a strident blast, and foemen fly." "If you do not maintain a fleet double the strength of the French, you will be invaded and ruined, as sure as my name is Thomas Symonds!" But for his sex, indeed, we would be inclined to term him "the Cassandra of our Navy," so loud and so well founded and so completely disregarded are his vaticinations. With all these expressions of an alarm which is merely "put on," because the gallant Admiral is not afraid of any one—not even of Harry Keppel—there is, however, a great deal of sad and sober truth in what he writes. But the question is whether any Government would or could venture on the grand career of shipbuilding, which Sir T. Symonds and his brother Jeremiahs recommend to their instant attention. We believe that Sir T. Symonds and Lord H. Lennox are nearer the truth than the Admiralty are, and they are wiser than the Lords, Civil and Naval, who try to persuade us we have nothing to fear from all the world in arms.

THE present system of turning the home battalion into a depôt for the battalion abroad cannot but be detrimental to the general efficiency of the home battalion and of the service at large. In order to keep a battalion abroad up to a strength of only 800 men, two depôts are required, both very expensive. First, there is the Brigade Depôt, established at a great cost, with four depôt companies. Recruits are here enlisted or collected, clothed, to a slight extent drilled, and then forwarded to the real depôt, the home battalion. At the latter they are equipped, drilled and disciplined, educated, put through their gymnastic course, and instructed in musketry. When the trooping season comes round, drafts of those who are twenty years of age, and have completed one year's service, are sent to the foreign battalion. Most of the battalions at home preparing these drafts are at a very low establishment themselves,—four at 650, eight at 500, and forty-three at 480. After the drafts have taken their departure, there is not much left of the so-called "home" battalion. Half of those who remain are recruits,—men under twenty years of age and one year's service. Three-fourths of the numbers would have to be made up from the Reserve, if the battalion was suddenly required to be brought up to war strength. And this is the case in fifty out of seventy battalions on home service at the present time. The battalions first for foreign or active service are at a higher strength,—twelve at 950, and four at 850. If these battalions are not acting as depôts for their linked battalions abroad, they are doing depôt work for themselves,—getting their young and hastily-put-together regiments drilled and disciplined. These battalions, although in the first corps d'armée, have to be weeded wholesale before going on service, as was the case during the war in Egypt, one battalion having been found to have no fewer than 450 men unfit to proceed abroad. The men thus got rid of could only have been an incumbrance, and would have been far better at the depôts until fit to join the colours. If the home battalions are to be efficient, the recruits for both battalions must be trained at the depôts, where the best staff that both the battalions can produce ought to be employed for the purpose of instructing them. Before leaving the depôt, the recruit should be thoroughly drilled, have been through his recruit's course of musketry, his gymnastic course, an elementary course of field works, and obtained the fourth-class certificate of education. Before joining the colours, he ought to be at least twenty years of age. How can battalions doing garrison duty in disturbed parts of Ireland properly train large drafts of recruits, with detachments at out-stations? A brigade depôt, always stationary, with its four depôt companies, surely should have greater facilities for training recruits than a regiment employed on duty such as that which devolves on most corps on the Irish Establishment. Instead of having battalions as at present at so many different establishments, and full of untrained men, it would be better to have nearly all at the lowest strength, but have no untrained men, or men under twenty in the ranks. The depôts would then be enabled to have a larger establishment, and have more time to fit men for duty with the colours. If the first twelve regiments for foreign service were kept at a strength of 640 and the remainder at the lowest strength (480), the depôts could be raised to an establishment of 180 each. Those battalions at 640 would require an increase of 180 to bring them up to foreign-service strength (820). Instead of filling them up at home, the foreign battalion, which it relieves, and which will be on the reduced establishment on its return home, could transfer eight serjeants and 180 men, who had been the shortest time abroad, or volunteers, to complete them to their proper strength These transfers, or volunteers, would help to season the regiment; and in case of a battalion going to India would be invaluable as knowing the ways of the country.

NOW that Admiral Pierre is dead, the attacks made upon him will, we hope, teach certain newspapers to be somewhat less scandalous. It was said that Admiral Pierre "pretended to be ill," that his malady was, as one very "funny" paper said, "all my" (his) "eye," and in order that he might have an excuse for retiring. Some of the French papers insinuated that he had been sacrificed by the Government to "our resentment" at his masterful behaviour at Tamatave. M. Pierre had only too much reason for giving up his command, and he only came to his native land to die; but all the same, his death has removed serious obstacles to the complete adjustment of the Madagascar difficulty. It does not appear easy to reconcile Admiral Pierre's seizure of Mr. Shaw on the ridiculous charge of drugging French soldiers, with his reputation for good sense, but his correspondence with Commander Johnstone, so far as we know of it, gives evidence of only too much of the energy with which he was credited, and of an arrogant and unconciliatory spirit in dealing with officers of the Queen at sea. We hope, in justice to our own officers and to the Navy, the whole correspondence will be forthcoming speedily. The death of Admiral Pierre puts an end to the misunderstanding between France and England in regard to the conduct of the late Admiral towards British subjects in Madagascar. It is our duty now to forgive and to forget, remembering only that, had Admiral Pierre been an English Naval officer, the country would have supported him to a man. On the other hand, we have cause to be proud of the straightforward and manly conduct of Commander Johnstone, who vindicated British rights, and upheld British honour and prestige. Admiral Pierre took offence at an officer so junior to himself as was Commander Johnstone daring to in any way interfere with his action. He looked upon it in the light of an impertinence for a Commander of the English Navy, in such a diminutive ship, to dare to oppose the fleet he commanded. But Commander Johnstone merely did his duty. The whole incident is now at an end; and it is satisfactory to remember that the Prime Minister informed the House that Commander Johnstone had sustained the honour and dignity of England, as also British interest at Tamatave, with firmness and moderation, and that his conduct had met with the approval of the Government. We are informed that had Admiral Pierre lived, the Admiralty would have been prepared to vindicate the action of Commander Johnstone completely, and to show that the French Admiral had acted with as much haste and impetuosity as Mr. Gladstone did when he first brought before the indignant House and country the matter of Consul Pakenham's death.

It is very lucky that Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett, V.C., was not at Tamatave when two French ships-of-war, cleared for action, ranged up alongside the Dryad. Peace between England and France would certainly have trembled in the balance, to say the least of it.

Sir Astley Cooper Key has returned to the Admiralty. Admiral Lord Alcester has proceeded on short leave of absence to Yorkshire.

The Admiralty have put a stop to the habit of allowing petty officers and seamen quartered in the Naval barracks at Sheerness to wear civilian clothes when on leave. The reporters for the daily Press have informed their respective journals that "considerable dissatisfaction has been caused among petty officers and seamen stationed here by the promulgation of an order prohibiting them from wearing private clothes when ashore on leave." We hope their Lordships will give both petty officers and seamen to understand that they must put away their "private clothes" until they gain their discharges.

The news we publish this week in our columns devoted to ships' movements goes to show that desertion and insubordination under the pendant are on the increase on the Pacific Station, as well as in other quarters of the globe. We fear the advocates of the total abolition of flogging in the Navy have a very difficult problem to solve, in devising a substitute for this mode of punishment which shall carry with it the same deterrent effect. Most assuredly, imprisonment, even with hard labour, does not.

Rear-Admiral Brandreth has visited the Dockyards to see that everything is in order for the annual inspection. We think it would be more useful if the descent of the Lords were made without warning.

Sir William Hewett was in the Euryalus, at Zanzibar on September 10, having the Briton, Tourmaline, Osprey, Dragon, and Ranger in company. The Dryad was at Tamatave. This concentration of the East Indies Squadron at Zanzibar is due to telegraphic orders sent by the Admiralty, when it was thought advisable to assemble a sufficient force within reasonable distance of Madagascar. The death of Admiral Pierre has, however, entirely altered the aspect of affairs; but so long as the French maintain a fleet in Malagasy waters, it would be impolitic to disperse the ships.

We regret to hear that Captain J. D'Arcy, of the Duncan, flag captain to the Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, has been obliged to relinquish his appointment through ill-health. He has been confined in Melville Hospital several weeks.

Some slight astonishment has been created, both here and in France, by the order given on the part of the French Government to Messrs. Jarrow and Co., of Poplar, for three light steamboats for service in Tonquin. "It is regrettable," says the Temps, "that we should have been obliged to address ourselves to our neighbours on the other side of the Channel; but there are certain yards in England admirably organised for delivering such craft at a short notice. Those French yards capable of producing these boats have orders on hand. In spite of the law of protection accorded to our Naval construction business, it is impossible for us to compete with England, whose admirable yards are becoming more and more the yards of all the second-rate Naval Powers."

Mr. Rendel arrived at Plymouth last Saturday in his steam yacht, paid a semi-official visit to Devonport and Keyham Dockyards, and inspected the gun mountings and fittings of the Agamemnon and Bellerophon.

The general idea of the British settler abroad, as expressed by the correspondent of the London newspaper, is that the British Fleet is solely maintained to "protect him," i.e., to enable him to point his finger to the white ensign, and say to his more or less coloured brother, or his rival European, "There is my friend, Captain Blazer, of her Majesty's ship Infernal, and I tell you, that if you annoy me, he'll shell you out of the place in five minutes!" If Blazer is not on the spot, there's a pretty rumpus. "Where's the Fleet?" Every one of our fellow-subjects resident in a foreign country is burning with indignation because the ships are not opposite his hall-door whenever there is a street riot. The Alexandria outbreak, for which they are still hanging up men by the half-dozen in Egypt, showed that a fleet cannot "protect" people on shore, or even intimidate their enemies, but all our fellow-subjects who are "located" in Chinese seaboard towns just now are very angry "the Squadron is not in sight. The Chinese are cheeky. What on earth is the Admiral about?"

Many of our readers will hear with regret that Lord A. Paget is rather seriously indisposed.

Lieutenant William des Vœux Hamilton and Sub-Lieutenants Arthur David Ricardo, Claud A. W. Hamilton, and William Henry Nicholson, serving on board the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, have been promoted respectively to Commander and Lieutenant in her Majesty's Fleet, with seniority of September 7, 1883. H.S.H. Lieutenant Prince Louis of Battenberg has been appointed to the vacancy created by the promotion of Lieutenant Hamilton. The vacancies created by the promotion of the three Sub-Lieutenants have not yet been filled up.

We published a letter last week from "A Poor Marine, with a Large Family," complaining that, whereas the children of Marines have hitherto had free education at the barrack schools, they are now charged for certain stationery; and that the children of Pensioners are allowed to remain in the school, to the detriment of those whose fathers are still in the service. With regard to the first complaint, there must be something wrong, if such a charge as that referred to has been made, as the supply of copy-books and other stationery for the use of the children is ample, and requires no supplementary purchase. As to the second point, it is now some years since the children of Pensioners were removed from the barrack schools, except of those who still remain in Admiralty employ. These are sanctioned by their Lordships' authority; and, therefore, the cases of the Colour-Serjeants named by our correspondent, who are employed in the Dockyard, are not contrary to regulations, as he supposes.

The French ironclads of the 1st class that will approach completion at the end of 1883 are four, viz., the Foudroyant, with 16½-in. armour, and 48-ton guns, to the extent of 95·2; the Regnier, 20-in. armour, 72-ton guns, 90·0; and the Caiman and Terrible, of the same class, armour, and armament, 80·0 and 83·0 respectively. Of English ironclads in the same category (1st class), it is only proposed to approach to completion two, viz., the Edinburgh and Colossus, of 18-in. armour, and 43-ton guns, to the extent of 82·0 and 92·0 each.

Last Tuesday's Gazette, under the heading "Army Pay Department," announced the promotion of Major Cattell to be Chief Paymaster, vice Ball, retired, and of Major Raynes to be Staff Paymaster, vice Cattell. As seven Staff Paymasters who are eligible for promotion have been passed over by the advancement of Major Cattell, it may be as well to explain that Majors Cattell and Raynes have obtained these steps because they formerly served in the Pay Sub-Department of the late Control Department, under the provisions of the Royal Warrant of October 22, 1877 (Army Circular 170 of that year), which created the Army Pay Department. Paragraph 42 of that Warrant provided that officers formerly of the Pay Sub-Department should succeed, if otherwise eligible, to vacancies caused by the retirement of officers of that Department.

It was notified in Division Orders, at Aldershot, early in the week, that the 3rd Hussars would return to their old quarters in the West Cavalry Barracks, squadron by squadron, as soon as the painting of the stables (which was recommended as a sanitary precaution) is completed. Glanders has entirely disappeared from among the horses of this corps, which has been under canvas since July 29 last. The reasonable time the regiment has thus been camped out during pleasant weather is due, in a great measure, to the proverbial expedition of the Royal Engineer Department in matters such as these.

The Avenir Militaire is highly satisfied with the manner in which the Reservists of the classes of 1874 and 1876 turned out on August 25 for their twenty-eight days' training. "Year by year," says that paper, "things improve, the men showing greater alacrity in joining their respective corps, and going through their duties." The Avenir at the same time complains of the scant ceremony and unnecessary severity with which the recruits are often treated by Jacks in office. But these things will happen in the best regulated armies.

The following is a list of the officers still serving regimentally who were present at the first of our great victories over the Russian Armies in the Crimea on September 20, 1854, just twenty-nine years ago:—Cavalry—Veterinary-Surgeon Harpley, Royal Horse Guards; Captain J. Brown, paymaster, Royal Dragoons; Quartermaster Heffron, 8th Hussars. Yeomanry Cavalry—Lieutenant-Colonel R. F. Morrison, Denbighshire Hussars. Artillery (Militia)—Colonel Sir A. Halket, Bart., Scottish Division. Infantry—Colonel Fitzroy, Coldstream Guards; Captain J. M'Blain, Scots Guards; Lieutenant-Colonels Harkness and Pocklington, 5th Foot; Colonel Luke O'Connor, V.C., 23rd Foot; Captain Knightley (quartermaster), 23rd Foot; Quartermaster Nettles, 39th Foot; Quartermaster Forbes, 42nd Highlanders; Colonel Corban, 49th Foot; Major Gavegan, 49th Foot; Lieutenant-Colonel Fyler, 50th Foot; Lieutenant-Colonel Tucker, 68th Foot; Quartermaster Lamb, Rifle Brigade. Militia—Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon, Lothian Regiment; Quartermaster Anderson, the Buffs; Colonel Sheppard, Lancaster Regiment; Lieutenant-Colonel Cooper, the Royal Irish Regiment; Captain McLeod (quartermaster), Scottish Rifles; Colonel G. P. Evelyn, Surrey Regiment; Colonel Aldridge, Sussex Regiment; Captain Simpson, V.C. (quartermaster), the Black Watch; Captain Reid (quartermaster), the Derbyshire Regiment.

A French military writer, who has been taking a tour in Belgium, has a good deal to say in favour of the Army, which appears to him to be organised upon sound principles, but not large enough. He was astonished and grieved to find the country thoroughly German, from the King down to the peasant, and he attributes this change of feeling to the faulty diplomacy of the French Republic. He treats us to an excellent anecdote. "A very distinguished staff officer of the Belgium Army invited to the German autumn manœuvres in 1881 was treated with great civility by General de Waldersee, the probable successor of Field-Marshal von Moltke. He was asked by him to visit the establishment of the Permanent Staff, at Berlin, and was taken by one of the officers attached to the General to 'Section 3,' where he was left alone for a minute while his guide went to look for the chief. An enormous map of Belgium and the north of France, which was hanging on the wall, attracted his attention. All the halting-places for an army on the march from Germany to Belgium were exactly marked upon this map in blue, while not only were the fortifications, even those proposed in Belgium, marked in red, but also a new system of fortresses turned against France." The chief of the section makes his appearance, sees the Belgian major with his eyes fixed upon the "accursed" map, and saying, "That is not for you." drags him into another room. The French writer adds that a good many Belgians regret that their country remained neutral during the Franco-German war, instead of imitating the action of Sardinia in the days of the Crimea. Had Belgium joined Germany in 1870, they say, she would have earned the gratitude and protection of that country, and probably have received as a reward a slice of old Flemish territory.

There is no man who has had more experience in Chinese diplomacy than Sir Harry Parkes, British Minister at the Court of Pekin. He entered the Consular service in China as a youth, and, becoming a proficient in the language, quickly rose to the post of Consul, which position he held at the outbreak of the war in 1857 of England and France against China. In virtue of his office, he was present at the capture of Canton, and accompanied most of the expeditions up to the end of the war, which terminated with the capture of Pekin. He was taken prisoner with Mr. Lock (attaché), Major Brabazon, D.A.Q.M.G., Lieutenant Anderson, Messrs. Bowlby, De Norman, and others, when on a reconnoitring expedition in front of Chang-kia-wan, the greater number of whom were tortured and ruthlessly killed; but Mr. Parkes, Mr. Lock, and some troopers, after suffering many indignities before San-ko-lin-sin and other Mandarins, and hourly expecting to be executed, were at length liberated, and a compensating sum of money was paid to them, on pressure being brought to bear by the invading force. It is recorded in a work on the Chinese War of 1860, by Lieutenant-Colonel (now Lord) Wolseley, that Mr. Parkes "on all occasions upheld the dignity of the nation to which he belonged." At the conclusion of the war, Mr. Parkes was created a K.C.B., and shortly afterwards appointed Minister at Japan. Of an energetic, brave, and determined character, he has never been known to knuckle down to the Mandarins; but from long experience of the Chinese character, is always able to hold his own. Under these circumstances, should difficulties arise, the presence of Sir Harry Parkes at Pekin will at least insure a satisfactory care of British interests.

The manœuvres of the 7th and 8th French Army Corps were commenced a few days ago between Dijon and Besançon, and were followed by Russian, English, Italian, German, and Chinese officers. The preliminaries are said to have been carried out without a hitch,—that is to say, in the space of four hours a large number of Reservists were thoroughly equipped and ready to march; a fact which augurs well for the rapidity with which a general mobilisation could be accomplished. Two classes of Reservists having been called out for training, the companies found their effectives raised to 150 men, or to within 50 of their maximum war establishment. After having manœuvred by brigade for a few days, operations on a larger scale were commenced; and the 7th Corps represented an army invading France by way of the defiles of the Jura, and after having invested Besançon, marching with five brigades on Dijon. We may mention that just before these operations began, a Major belonging to the 7th Corps, and who was watching a line of skirmishers, was shot dead, but whether by accident or on purpose is not known. The 8th Corps opposed the march of the enemy, and concentrated four brigades on the right bank of the Saone, near Pontarlier. After a series of manœuvres, which were all laid down beforehand, and which were, consequently, of no peculiar interest, the 8th Corps was repulsed. It was remarked that the 8th Corps, which had to protect its position at Pontarlier with entrenchments, was very slow in getting under cover, and that the men evidently require instruction in the use of the pick and the spade.

We understand that a revision of the pay of Paymasters, with the honorary rank of Major, in India, is contemplated. If any revision of the present pay tables does take place, it is to be hoped that the opportunity may be taken advantage of for revising the whole scale, as under existing rates a Paymaster is far worse off in India than at home, though he has greater responsibilities, as in that country the Paymaster has the whole of the officers in his payment, which is not the case at home. As an almost unexceptional rule, officers on home service draw their pay through the agents. A comparison of the length of service rates of pay of Paymasters and regimental officers (Infantry) will show that the average service of a Paymaster is at present over 22 years, that of regimental officers under the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel being under 20 years. Whereas the difference between the pay of the Regimental Captain and the Paymaster is 3s. 5d. per diem in England,—or if the allowances granted to both are taken into consideration, 4s. 6d.,—in India it is but 30 rupees. The Regimental Major, on appointment, receives at home 13s. 7d. per diem (in India 640 rs. 4 ans. per mensem), whilst the Paymaster (honorary Major) receives at home 17s. 6d. per diem, and in India 506 rs. 11 ans. per mensem. In other words, the Paymaster who at home receives 3s. 11d. per diem more than the Regimental Major, in India receives 163 rs. 9 ans. per mensem less. In the next advance the difference is still more glaring, the Paymaster at home receiving 4s. more, whilst in India he gets 252 rs. 1 an. less than the Regimental Major.

Chinese affairs are evidently causing great trouble in France. Half the Cabinet seems in favour of adopting energetic measures, and risking everything rather than retire from a rather false position. The President of the Republic and the other half of the Cabinet object to foreign expeditions as costly and dangerous, and hardly in accordance with Republican principles. We learn that 3,000 men are ready to sail; but most competent authorities consider that in the event of war with China, not 3,000, but 30,000 men will be required to uphold the honour, glory, and interests of the tricolor. In some quarters the Chinese troops are evidently under-rated, and in others over-rated. We are informed that Commandant Rivière really met his death through under-rating the enemy. The day before he fell there had been some brisk skirmishing, during which the Black Flags were driven back with great loss. The Commandant was angry that so much ammunition should have been wasted on such rabble, and when he went out the next day it was stick in hand to belabour the scamps. What this and the loose way in which his column was formed led to is well-known. The present military commandant, General Bouet, is said to be not much of a soldier, and to be altogether lacking in the energy and action necessary for such a command. Of course, if the proposed reinforcements are sent out, the force will be placed under the orders of a General of Division.

The distribution of independent Cavalry Divisions along the western frontier of Russia—six on the German, four on the Austrian frontier—has long attracted the attention of the Military authorities at Berlin, They form a standing menace, for in case of war they might soon be concentrated into compact bodies. The addition of Horse Artillery, and the conversion of all the regiments of the Line into dragoon regiments, which are being specially trained for service usually performed by infantry—constituting them, in fact, regiments of mounted infantry—has greatly added to the value of those Divisions. It is the intention in Russia to make as great a use of the numerous cavalry at disposal as was done during the raids in the American Secessionist War, the great mass of irregular cavalry which Russia possesses specially favouring such an extended use. In the stretch of frontier between the Niemen and the Vistula, five Russian Divisionsal Staffs are located (Suwalki, Koono, Bjelostok, Vlozlawsk, and Lornza), of which three are distant only a little over 20 miles from the Prussian frontier, and the most distant (Bjelostok) 100 miles. Those five Russian Cavalry Divisions almost encircle East Prussia. No one in Germany thinks of finding fault with the precautions taken by Russia; but, at the same time, the former is not to be blamed for being doubly watchful.

The nature of the 28-centimètre Krupp gun lately added to the German Coast Artillery is:—Length, 9·8 mètres; length of bore, 8·96 mètres; weight of barrel, 37, 400 kilogrammes; number of grooves, 64; weight of garrison carriage and slide, 16,175 kilogrammes; of armour-piercing shell, 345 kilogrammes; of bursting charge, 8 kilogrammes; of common shell, 296 kilogrammes; of bursting charge, 10 kilogrammes; of charge for armour-piercing shell, 115 kilogrammes; and for common shell, 108 kilogrammes. Six have been purchased by the Austrian Government for Pola; the Portuguese Government have ordered four for the Tagus.

Among other troops with which it is proposed to reinforce the Army operating in Tonquin, the Foreign Legion is mentioned. It is urged, however, that a selection should be made, as, when this corps was sent to Mexico, the number of desertions was very considerable. The Progrès Militaire expresses the hope that General Saussier will choose in preference Alsatians and Lorrainers, who will, no doubt, remain true to France. The same paper says that a number of non-commissioned officers have asked to exchange their stripes for the honour of going out to fight John Chinaman. We really doubt this, for two reasons,—1st, the difficulty of getting non-commissioned officers to serve an hour beyond their time; 2nd, because service in Tonquin offers no special attraction.

A correspondent writes:—"Your article on cavalry officers in the Army and Navy Gazette of Sept. 1 is true enough, but there is another reason why parents fight shy of putting their sons into cavalry regiments, and it is a reason quite within the power of the commanding officers to remove, and that is the absurd and foolish fines that are imposed on all young officers, and which, either at first or at last, come out of their parents' pockets; I say distinctly come out of their parents' pockets, for if a sufficient allowance is made to a young man to live on, he ought to live within it, but if, in addition, he has to pay a lot of fines, he must just go to his father for them. I refer more particularly to the riding fines. A young fellow fresh from school or crammer is put on to a horse in the riding-school, and if he loses his cap it is 10s., if he loses his stirrup 10s., and if the restive beast throws him, he has to pay £1. That all mounts up pretty fast, and if, in addition to that, you add the band, the drag, the races, hunters, a hack or two, and all the small items that are absolutely necessary to have, and to do, it is beyond the means of the purses of most country gentlemen, especially in these days of no rents. Let the commanding officers of the cavalry regiments, then, put a stop to these vexatious fines, and that will be a good beginning. Other things may follow, but that is one evil which admits of an easy remedy."

HINTS ON SHOOTING.

SIR,—There is a long letter in your issue of Aug. 11, signed "J. D. B.," on the shooting of the British Army. Perhaps you will be able to find place for a few remarks of mine on the same subject. As a matter of fact, the Boers are not better shots than our men. This is proved by friendly engagements; because, up to the time of the sudden outbreak, no opportunity was lost of having them partakers in our shooting-matches. Bronkhurst Spruit cannot be any guide as to their capabilities. There the ground was measured to a yard, every man was carefully posted, and in nearly every instance had a rest for his rifle, so that the 94th were riddled to atoms before even an effort could be made.* Everywhere else in the Transvaal, whether from the trenches in the besieged garrisons, or in the open outside Pretoria, our men were superior in steadiness, and always inflicted the greater loss on the enemy, though the latter were under cover, in positions chosen to sweep the approaches to them, and our men were invariab'y the attacking party, and, of course, wholly exposed. The Boers are wonderfully gifted with a knowledge of distance, and to make our Army really effective in war, a great deal more attention should be devoted to judging distance, and to taking advantage of all kinds of cover and undulations of ground. Our Army firing at known distances average a precision which in war would be simply destructive; therefore, no opportunity should be allowed to pass in practising the men to correctly estimate distances, and to accurately and instantly allow for all atmospherical changes and variations of scenery. The route-marching season can be utilised with great success, by placing a few files of men at different points in the fields adjoining the route taken by the battalion furnished with blank ammunition. The writer has had the good-fortune to see this course carried out, and with great rapidity and spirit, because the best section always got some little reward, which ensured that you received a true indication of the ability of the men. All General Orders that have been published this year relative to musketry (with the exception of men shooting in all weathers) in my opinion (and other valued experience) require, indeed demand, immediate revision. The order of qualification for marksmen in second period practically excludes many good shots from ever attaining the badge "marksmen," where regulations are strictly adhered to, and it is extremely doubtful who, if any, are our marksmen now. However, it is not at all unusual for men who accumulate the splendid score of from 230 to 240 individual firing to have to stand aside as inferior to the soldier who makes 195, and gets credited with the requisite number of hits in that class so splendidly arranged, that two men can fire at the same target at the same time, thus holding out a regular invitation to fraud. The recommendation of "J. D. B." about the battalion prize should certainly be adopted, and the Army prize at home should be separate from India. Company clubs should be the centre of attraction in every regiment, and care should be taken that every man feels their working by rules thoughtfully arranged; and, again, by way of final exhortation (sensible as I am of its great importance), I say promote and practise with great earnestness judging of distance. RICOCHET.

* We have reason to doubt this statement. Any one who has seen a Boer rolling over an antelope at 300 or 400 yards' distance—as our correspondent may have done, as he appears to know the country—must admit that few of our soldiers could equal the Dutchmen in that kind of shooting at all events.—ED. A. & N. G.

In recognition of the military jubilee, or completion of the 50th year of military service, of Prince Alexander of Hesse, the Emperor has appointed his Highness chief of the 13th Holstein Dragoons, which forms part of the 15th corps garrisoning Alsace, and has invited him to attend the forthcoming manœuvres of the 11th Corps, at Homburg. Prince Alexander, who commanded the Würtemberg, Baden, and Hessian troops which fought against Prussia in 1866, is said to have accepted the invitation, and thus an old sore has been thoroughly healed.

Major Ashburner, Queen's Bays, writes from Aldershot:—"The inventor of the improvised tactical model, mentioned in a recent paragraph in your paper, was Capt. Herbert Gall, late 96th Regt., who has since retired from the service. My share in the invention has been confined to showing its value for the theoretical instruction of non-commissioned officers and men. I shall be happy to answer any inquiries from officers interested in this subject who may wish to experiment with the model."

Staff Com. Petch has been appointed Queen's Harbour-master at Pembroke Dockyard, vice Staff Com. W. W. Vine.

Alexander Stewart, 40th Company; Thomas Corbishley, 38th Company; and Charles Willesher, 45th Company, serjeants of the Royal Marine Light Infantry, have been awarded by the Admiralty the medal for long service and good conduct.

A party of mechanics left Sheerness on Monday in the Sampson for the measured mile, Maplin Sands, to complete beacons for the course on trial trips. The beacons were made by convicts stationed at Chatham.

The Carnatic, at Portsmouth, old line-of-battle ship, which was to have been sold out of the service, has been placed at the disposal of a committee for experimental purposes.

THE FRENCH IN MADAGASCAR.

Several letters between Com. Johnstone, of the Dryad, and Admiral Pierre, supposed to have reached the French Government some time ago, but not made public, are published through the Paris correspondent of the Times. The first is as follows:—"Her Majesty's ship Dryad, at Tamatave, June 20, 1883. Sir,—By a detailed account, I have been informed that Tamatave has been bombarded by two of the ships under your orders, without any warning given, and without any apparent respect for the safety or property of the foreign residents; also that property of British subjects has been injured. While receiving this intelligence with every possible reserve, it is my duty, Sir, again to protest against any damage being done to British subjects or their property, and especially against fire being opened on the places in which they reside, without due notice being given, according to prevailing custom. I have, &c.—C. JOHNSTONE, Commander. Le Contre-Amiral Pierre, Commandant-en-Chef la Division Navale de la Mer des Indes." To this Admiral Pierre replied on the same day to the effect that he could not acknowledge any right on the part of Com. Johnstone to act as the mouthpiece (interprète) of the inhabitants of Tamatave, of whatever nationality they be, as regards the claims which these inhabitants may think they have a right to make against the French Government, for damages arising from the war. Further, that he had no authority to receive and entertain such demands, and still less to proceed to a verification so intricate (épineuse). Such affairs could only be treated diplomatically between Government and Government. Admiral Pierre declined, therefore, to receive further letters from Com. Johnstone on the subject. A second is as follows:—"By your letter of the 20th inst., you take the liberty of protesting against the war operations carried out by the vessels under my command, without (my) having warned you beforehand, and even without having warned anybody. Learn, M. le Commandant, since you seem to be unaware of it, or to have forgotten it, that all the Consuls interested were warned by me on June 1 of the commencement of the present hostilities. No foreigner has the right to ask a belligerent to reveal his secrets and projects. I, therefore, consider your protest as null and valueless (non avenue et de nulle valeur). I warn you that I shall receive no further similar letters from you." On June 23, in reply, presumably, to a further communication from Com. Johnstone, Admiral Pierre wrote:—"I am sorry to see that you are irritated at the measures which your repeated acts of opposition have forced me to take. You might, nevertheless, have expected them, after so many significant warnings; which warnings you have perfectly understood, seeing that you have excused your non-compliance (écarts). But you have persisted. This irritation is such that you are forgetful to the extent of asserting that the motives of the measures I have ordered lack entirely any justification (exactitude). To demonstrate this asserted absence of justification, you will require, M. le Commandant,—1. To prove that you did not make it requisite to repeat to you three times, on June 2, June 6, and June 8, the request to withdraw from the French line of attack, before acceding to it (obtempérer). 2. To prove that you did not write to me on June 17 a letter laying claim to meddle (vous immiscer) with the course of justice, and enter into communication with prisoners in close confinement (au secret). 3. To prove that you did not write a letter to me on June 18, specifying the functions assigned by you to the officer placed near Mr. Pakenham to 'carry out' (expédier) the correspondence with (the district) outside Tamatave, the part for which Mr. Pakenham had not ceased to be consul. 4. To prove that this officer, Lieut. Knowles, did not write on June 15 to the Mayor of Tamatave in Mr. Pakenham's name, a letter signed by himself, as officer of the Dryad, asking permission for certain servants of Mr. Pakenham to reside there, thus substituting himself for the last-named in a perfectly personal and in nowise consular matter. 5. To prove that you did write on June 20 to the Commandant a letter asking for the explanation (compte) of an order as to wearing arms—an order you yourself advised me to issue, in the first lesson you were kind enough to give me in your letter of June 3. You ought to reflect, M. le Commandant, that the imputation of 'lacking entirely any justification,' coming from an officer of your rank and age, would make it unfitting (ôterait toute convenance) further to continue the correspondence which I have thus far had the pleasure of carrying on with you." The next two letters are from Sir J. Pope Hennessy, the first asking Admiral Pierre to give Com. Crawfurd every facility "consistent with the service in which you are engaged for removing or relieving Mauritians or other British subjects who have been placed in a position of danger or distress by the accident of war;" the second stating that Mrs. Shaw, at present residing in Mauritius, had appealed to him, as the nearest representative of her Majesty, to intervene with his Excellency. Admiral Pierre, dating from Tamatave on July 8, replied to the first in the following terms:—"M. le Gouverneur,—On the arrival of the steamer Stella, I ordered the offer of a refuge at Mauritius, and of the means of being conveyed thither, placed by your Excellency at the disposal of the Mauritians and other British subjects desirous of leaving Madagascar, and who had not been able to do so from want of money and for other reasons, to be made publicly known by the Mayor of Tamatave. Ninety-two persons availed themselves of your generous offer, and I at once transmitted a list of them to Com. Crawfurd, who at first thought he could only receive 50, but whom feelings of humanity induced to receive all. They are embarking at this moment, and the Stella will be able to start this evening, as her commander desires. There are still at Tamatave a good number of subjects of her Britannic Majesty, as well as natives of her Majesty's Indian possessions, who are desirous of escaping from the risks of war, and who have not been able to find room this time in the Stella. I regret not to have had the pleasure of seeing Com. Crawfurd, owing to the quarantine regulations; but I was glad to aid him to the utmost of my power in the fulfilment of the mission your Excellency had charged him with, and thus to show you, M. le Gouverneur, my desire to be useful to all her Britannic Majesty's subjects, as well as my special desire to be agreeable to you in all circumstances." To the second, Admiral Pierre replied:—"M. le Gouverneur,—I have received the letter your Excellency did me the honour of writing to me on the subject of the Rev. George Andrew Shaw, at Tamatave, against whom a grave accusation is brought. I must not leave you in ignorance of the fact that I have had to impose silence on the arrogant pretensions of Com. Johnstone, of her Britannic Majesty's ship Dryad, to interfere (intervenir) in this matter. But to the courteous questions dictated to your Excellency by your interest in Mrs. Shaw, whose fate is certainly deserving of pity, I am glad to be able to reply with some confidential particulars, which I can reveal without interfering with (troubler) the course of justice. On the occupation of Tamatave by the French, Mr. Shaw inhabited as tenant a house which was proposed by the owner, Mr. Aitken, to receive a picket of soldiers. When they came to take up their quarters they found in the garden bottles of wine, evidently set out (disposées) to tempt them. Those who tasted suddenly fell into a state of lethargic intoxication. The officer in command at once broke the bottles and poured out the liquid, keeping a bottle as a specimen, which is at present at Réunion, undergoing chemical analysis, and the return of which I am awaiting. The tenant and the owner were at once arrested. Mr. Aitken was set at liberty on the following day, for want of sufficient evidence (charges suffisantes); and Mr. Shaw was detained as a prisoner. Justice has since been conducting its inquiries, and Mr. Shaw will not be judged without a thorough investigation (instruction approfondie). The arrival of Mrs. Shaw at Tamatave while her husband is the subject of so serious a charge lends a dramatic interest to her situation. The poor lady came and implored me for her husband; and, in spite of the pity I felt for her, I was obliged to harden my heart against her grief, to fulfil a duty which obliged me to allow justice to take its course. But I see, with pleasure, that you do not doubt that I feel the distress of Mrs. Shaw, or that any subject of her Britannic Majesty is sure to meet with kindness at the hands of a French tribunal of justice. Your Excellency and Mrs. Shaw herself may have confidence both in the generosity and in the justice of the judges. You may be sure that if Mr. Shaw's innocence is admitted (reconnue), I shall not for one moment delay his return to his family."

LIEUTENANT CONWAY GORDON, R.M.A.

A correspondent, signing himself "Justice," asks:—"Would 'Fair Play' consider it such, if Messrs. Bernard, Clarke, and Coward (who were on what he styles the list of lieutenants of the Royal Marine Artillery when his protégéés, Messrs. Slessor and Cox, joined the Naval College, Greenwich), were transferred to the Royal Marine Artillery, and posted in their original rank? And what would he say if Mr. Fraser (seniority 1877) and Mr. Hardy (seniority 1878), both of whom were recommended for transfer by Admiral Luard's Committee, appeared in next Gazette as transfers to the Royal Marine Artillery, with their original dates of commissions? I deny that Messrs. Slessor and Cox were on the list of lieutenants. 'Fair Play' pleasantly omits the explanatory adjective 'probationary.' The officers unfortunately failed in their probation, and to suddenly break through all regulations of the service, for the benefit of two officers, is, I submit, neither fair-play nor justice."

"A Victim" writes:—"In the Army and Navy Gazette of Saturday last, there is a paragraph stating that it was probably the intention of the authorities to allow promotion to continue to go by battalions in the case of the recently amalgamated regiments. So far, so good. But that does not do away with the injustice of the promotion of juniors over the heads of seniors, which has taken place so frequently in the regiments alluded to, through the steps going in the battalions in which the senior officers were junior to the senior officers of their linked battalion. In nearly all these regiments, the linking arrangement was carried out against the will of either battalion; but when such was done, presumably for the public good, and the officers of these battalions (formerly regiments) placed according to seniority on one list, surely it is monstrous, on any pretence whatever, that the juniors in these new regiments should be promoted over the heads of their seniors. It would certainly be only common justice—considering that it is the doing of the authorities that the situation has been created—to promote such seniors also to supernumerary majorities, to await absorption as vacancies recurred in their own battalions; and as the duties of major and captain are identical as regards company work, a major or two more and a captain or two less in a few regiments would do no harm. If this could not be done, it would, at any rate, make the injustice less if the superseded captains were made brevet majors. And there would be a precedent for this, in the case of the captains of cavalry and infantry who were superseded by the promotion of captains of artillery to majorities being given brevet majorities, and this, too, in different branches of the service! I trust that you will find room for this letter, which I know expresses the feelings of many others similarly situated."

The Admiralty have directed that the indentures of Henry T. Quinlan, engineer student, of the training school at Keyham, be cancelled, and he is to be discharged from the service at once, for having in his possession property belonging to other students.

New crews were selected at the Royal Naval Barracks on Tuesday for the Daring, Com. Elliott, and the Flying Fish, Com. Hoskyn, to be recommissioned on the China station. New crews are also to be furnished for the Champion, Capt. Pasley, commissioned at Sheerness on Dec. 7, 1880, and the Midge, which has been stationed in China for eight or nine years. The crews will leave in the Orontes and Himalaya. The Orontes is expected to be ready by Sept. 20, after a repair of her hull and machinery at a cost of over £40,000. She will take out supernumeraries for the Cape, and military reliefs for the Mauritius.

NAVAL PAYMASTERS.

The question of employing Executive officers to do Paymasters' duty, and of allowing the Paymasters' line to die a natural death, is again occupying attention. It is to be hoped, now that Lord Alcester, who has ever been in favour of the proposal, is at the Admiralty, that the question will be seriously entertained. We are well aware that the Paymasters' branch is most powerful, but that is no reason why a reform such as the one proposed should not be considered. As yet, every attempt to dispense with the services of this branch has been nipped in the bud. No sooner did Sir Beauchamp Seymour propose, some years ago, to appoint Executive officers as secretaries to Flag officers than a storm was raised about the ears of the Admiralty which it was difficult to quell. Executive officers in command remonstrated most strongly against the innovation. Mr. Goschen was assured that were mere writers, messing on the lower deck, set to copy despatches, secrets would at once be divulged; that no commanding officer could dispense with his confidential clerk or assistant-paymaster for secretary; that the victualling of the Fleet would go to the dogs, and that the service generally would be ruined. We do not understand why a system which works in the Army should not succeed in the Navy. The Executive officers who act as Paymasters in the Army, have their Paymaster-Serjeants and Assistant-Paymaster-Serjeants under them. The Colonel has his Orderly-room Staff at his disposal. Graft this system on the Navy, dispense with the Paymasters' line as a separate branch of the service, and call in the aid and services of Commanders and Lieutenants to perform all the duties now discharged by the Accountant Branch, as proposed by Lieutenant Sleeman, and we feel convinced that a step in the right direction will have been made. We will even go further. The diffusion of education among the people has brought a more highly-educated class of men into the ranks of our seamen and Marines. Why not take advantage of the knowledge thus placed at the country's disposal? Among the Marines especially are to be found many non-commissioned officers and men who are able and willing to pass for interpreterships in foreign languages. Why not make use of these men as Orderly-room clerks and Paymasters' clerks on board ship? We are aware that this proposal has been well received at Somerset House. We know that Lord Alcester has always been in favour of giving the scheme a fair trial. He is now at the Admiralty, and can initiate the reform if he chooses, for we do not suppose that his junior colleague, Rear-Admiral Richards, would offer any very serious opposition to the experiment.

OUR BOYS.

SIR,—A controversy is now raging in the Daily Telegraph on the subject of "What to Do with our Boys?" This is a very interesting matter, now-a-days, to our officers, since the complete overthrow of the old system and customs of the Queen's Army. Formerly, old officers of approved service could rely on obtaining one son a commission without purchase, and a second commission by purchase, and in the case of the death of a son in battle or on service, the vacant commission was invariably given to a younger brother of the deceased officer. This arrangement strengthened the hands of the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, by enabling him to recommend the sons of deserving officers to the Queen for commissions as reward for their services. This was one of the rewards held out to the senior officers of a badly-paid profession. But it has pleased late Governments to deprive officers of this provision for their sons, and to throw the commissions into the hands of School Boards, and of an army of schoolmasters and crammers, instead of leaving the patronage in the hands of the head of the Army, the Sovereign, the result being that commissions have become the property of plutocrats, who can afford to pay heavily for crammers and expensive schooling, and who generally have no claims whatever on the Army; and School Boards, who will send up their cleverest scholars for these competitive examinations. The poor officers' sons are, of course, beaten in the race; for their fathers cannot afford to pay for expensive education and cramming, which has become a necessity for success. Many poor officers try their best; pay crammers heavy premiums at the end of the regular schooling, cripple their means, and after all, their sons may be thrown on their hands. This, of course, must happen; as, at the last examination, 600 young men went up for 80 entrances into Sandhurst, 520 were bound to fail, as the highest marks win. No marks or advantages whatever are given to officers' sons for the services of their fathers. The sons of old serjeants and deserving privates and corporals are always considered deserving of promotion in the fathers' regiments, if they show zeal, steadiness, and attention to their duties, and they are sure to get on; whereas the officers' sons have been sacrificed to School Boards, and the new "fad" for the education of the masses. Whether School-board young men will make better officers than the sons of officers, who have been born and bred in the service, is more than doubtful. That the modern private will prefer a School-board officer to a gentleman's son to command him, is more than doubtful. The soldier can understand a gentleman's son, or one of themselves rising from the ranks to a commission, after working for it; but it is questionable whether he will see why young men with forced and over-worked brains should be fitted to command soldiers because they pass certain school tests. A great many officers' sons make more than the required number of marks for a very high qualifying examination, but they must come out in the first flight, or they lose. Many of these young gentlemen, who have failed in these Army examinations, which are becoming stiffer every year, now enlist to work for their commissions, and follow the family profession. It seems most desirable that a mixed committee of the Lords and Commons should consider this important question in the interests of the Army and the older officers, as the present state of things is most cruel to the parents. There is no reason whatever why officers' sons should not enlist under their proper names and serve for commissions, when they have failed in the School-board examinations. But it is essential that their position in the ranks as private soldiers should be marked, as in the Belgian Army. The Belgian gentleman private wears a bit of lace round his cuff,—silver in cavalry, gold in infantry. The distinguishing mark enables him off parade to mix with his own class, go into society, and walk with ladies and gentlemen in the streets, although he wears nothing but a private's uniform, and has to salute not only his officers, but the non-commissioned officers of his company. But on the other hand, the privates of his own company generally salute him, as they do non-commissioned officers. The gold or silver ring costs the State nothing, and produces a good feeling and mutual respect between the gentleman private and the poorer private. If this concession were made to officers' sons, and they were allowed to enlist from two to three years to work for their commissions, it would produce a good many valuable recruits, and prevent the poorer officers' sons being swamped by the School Board, and forced to adopt uncongenial pursuits. In the Prussian Army, a similar rule, a distinguishing mark (a silver sword-knot) is worn by gentlemen conscripts, who elect to serve one year at their own expense, without pay. Certainly, it appears that some concession is required to enable officers' sons to struggle against School Boards, and to enable them to follow the profession which has been followed by their families for generations.—I am, &c.,

GENERAL OFFICER.

P.S.—A much larger number of Queen's cadetships should be reserved for the Sovereign, quite one-third, to enable the Commander-in-Chief to nominate the sons of deserving officers to Sandhurst.

Moreover, he has already had some experience of the duties of the Military Department, having once before acted as Secretary. The command of the Royal Marine Artillery is again vacant, by the promotion of Col.-Commandant E. H. Cox to the rank of major-gen. According to seniority, the appointment would fall to Col. George Brydges, the second-commandant, whose seniority as a lieut.-col. in the corps is dated Oct. 1, 1877, and whose seniority as a col. in the Army is that of Oct. 1, 1881; but it is probable that it will be offered to Sir Francis W. Festing (supernumerary), whose seniority as lieut.-col. in the corps is March 24, 1879, and as col. in the Army, Jan. 7, 1874. Major-Gen. Cox will retain the command until the Admiralty have decided upon his successor.

51st King's Own Light Infantry. Lieut. Johnson has passed the higher-standard examination in Hindostanee. Lieut. Pollock, a probationer, attached to the 8th Bengal Cavalry, is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from Aug. 9, 1880.

54th Dorsetshire Regiment. Lieut. Evatt is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 2nd Punjab Infantry, on probation.

59th East Lancashire Regiment. The 5 and 9 Lilywhites' Gazette contains the following:—"Our colours have at last been thoroughly repaired, and we hope to see them for many a year with the battalion. It will be remembered by not a few that they were presented to the 59th Regt. by Lady Robinson, the wife of the then Governor of Ceylon, when the regiment commenced its tour of 14 years of foreign service, finishing up with two years' campaign in Afghanistan, where our colours had their 'baptism of fire' on April 19, 1880, at Ahmed Khel. The officers who had the honour on that occasion of carrying them were Lieut. Fulton (retired) and Lieut. Macadam; and it may be interesting to many to know that when the fierce onslaught of 3,000 or 4,000 Ghazis or fanatics on that occasion was made, and both flanks of our small line were turned, consisting of one British and two Native regts. [about 900 strong only], the colour party were momentarily in danger of being swept over by some Ghazi cavalry, who, having surprised a small detachment of our cavalry reconnoitring on our left flank, charged down hill from a ravine, driving them in on that flank, through the gallant Goorkhas, who, forming company squares, allowed the mingled rush of friend and foe to pass through their line, and it was not until it reached the rear of the centre of the 59th Regiment, on the right, that the Ghazis were finally disposed of, the General (Sir D. Stewart) and his staff, it was reported, having to draw their swords and the colour party to prepare for cavalry. To present Lilywhites, therefore, our colours are of special interest. First, they are the last 59th colours we shall carry bearing the number and title that has gained us every honour (not a few) we now bear. Second, they have accompanied the regiment from Ceylon to Afghanistan during, we may say, the whole of our late tour of active service. And thirdly, they have served with the regiment through the late campaign, when many now serving had the honour of protecting them in action, and assisting in adding our latest laurels—'Afghanistan, '78-80,' 'Ahmed Khel,'—to the long roll of honoured names they now bear. It is with the deepest regret that we have to chronicle this month yet another sad event to Lilywhites both present and past. We allude to the death of Col. Clarke, who, after a service of 33 years with the regiment, retired on full pay in Sept., 1878, on account of ill-health, and who, for the same reason, since his return to England, has been forced to spend his winters abroad. He had just returned from Cyprus apparently in excellent health, and had even projected his usual visit to his old corps, when his death was announced to us in the daily papers like a sudden shock. Col. Clarke was gazetted to a cornetcy in the 4th Dragoon Guards Sept. 26, 1845, but was transferred to the 59th on Nov. 28 of the same year. He was promoted lieut. in 1849, capt. in 1855, major in 1873, and brevet lieut.-col. in 1877. Col. Clarke was present with the 59th Regt. at the operations before, and the capture of Canton in 1857; for which he received the medal and clasp. Of a genial and kindly nature, a cheery companion, and a splendid officer, there are few who have known him, whatever be their rank, who will not regret his loss, feel that not only they, but Lilywhites at large, have suffered a severe loss."

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. Lieut. Russell, 4th Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate.

61st Gloucestershire Regiment. Capt. O'Connell sailed for India on Wednesday in H.M.S. Jumna. Lieut. the Hon. R. French has been granted leave from India to England for 12 months, on private affairs.

The following officers have left England this week, with head-quarters, in H.M.S. Jumna for India, viz.:—Col. Stevenson, C.B., Lieut.-Col. Todd, Brevet Lieut.-Col. Taylor, Majors Dashwood and Money, Brevet Major England, Capts. Gardner, Martin, and Steavenson, Lieuts. Adams, Wilbraham, Tyrwhitt-Walker, Cusack (adjt.), Kincaid, Barry, Hon. E. B. L. Stopford, Blood, Henry, Harrison, Wolfe, Conran, Mulock, Barnard, and Sandys, and Qrmr. Cole.

Assistance for conveyance to Liverpool, whence the battalion will proceed to York, to be stationed.

Pay Department. A correspondent addresses a warning to Paymasters going to India:—"A paymaster ranking with a captain at home draws about £12 per month, all told, more than a combatant captain. In India, he draws 31 rs. only per month more. After five years' service at home, he draws 2s. 6d. per diem extra pay. In India, the equivalent for this is 30 rs. per month only. Nothing extra has yet been given by the Indian Government to paymasters ranking with majors (the recent promotions), who at home, in addition to the 2s. 6d. per diem for five years' service, would draw about 1s. 6d. per diem, being the difference in allowances for the higher rank. The actual money responsibilities in India are greater than those at home. The War Office should represent this state of things to the Indian Government, which has effected a considerable saving by sending home all staff paymasters. The lack of candidates for the Army Pay Department when such a state of things exists, and the eager desire to avoid Indian service, as exemplified in the offers made for exchanges, are easily accounted for." During the past month the following changes of station, retirements, promotions, and appointments have taken place in the Pay Department:—Major Drage, on return from India, to the 33rd Regtl. District, Halifax; Major Macbean, to Fort George; Major Carey, from the 33rd Regtl. District, to the Unattached List, prior to embarkation for India; Capt. Whiteford, from Woolwich District Office, to Unattached List; Capt. Armstrong, from Home District, to Unattached List, prior to retirement from the service; Capt. Mitchell, from half-pay, to the Deolalee depot; Capt. Hanstock, to the 2nd Batn. 15th Regt.; Capt. Bell sailed last Saturday for Bombay; Capt. F. E. Webb has proceeded to the 32nd Regtl. District, Bodmin, vice Major Stockley, who leaves for Bombay to-day in the Serapis. Retirements:—Lieut.-Col. Ball, Aug. 8; Major Burke, Aug. 4; and Capt. Griffith, Aug. 21. Promotions:—Capts. Longley, from Aug. 9; Urquhart, from Aug. 10; and Stockley, from Aug. 15, to the rank of Major in the Army. 34 posts are vacant, viz.,—6 districts, 3 cavalry and 25 infantry regts

MILITARY RIDING.

Sir,—I read, in your issue of Sept. 1, with a surprise and regret which I am disposed to think will be shared by a large majority of Cavalry officers, the statement, probably inspired by the officer alluded to in the article, to which I refer, as having been on the Staff of the General Commanding during the recent campaign in Egypt, that the British trooper is in future to be allowed to rise in his stirrups when at the trot. I will premise the remarks I wish to make by saying that I wish to show a definite reason for maintaining the existing style of riding entirely apart from the facts that well is often well let alone, and that for a change which will be so detrimental to the general appearance of men when trotting in the school and of a regiment when on parade, there ought to accrue some very great and immediate advantages. What I would rather show is that such a change will be actually harmful to the individual riding of the trooper; and for this reason, that to enable a man to rise in his stirrups the existing standard for their length will inevitably have to be altered, and the men allowed to ride shorter than at present, as they cannot possibly rise when at a trot with the stirrups fitted as they now are; and this would, I think, be of all things the most damaging to the riding of the Dragoon. The tendency of men, as your Cavalry readers will agree, is always to shorten their stirrups as much as they are allowed, because this gives them a seat which is more comfortable and easier to them when maintained for long, but which I deny to be the best, either for them or for the service, for this reason, that a seat which is retained rather by grip than by balance is the one which best answers the purposes of military equitation, which I take it, is to give a man with his legs the most complete control over his horse, while he is deprived of one hand for the guidance and control of his mount, the other being occupied with his weapon. A hunting seat, I would contend, does not answer the purpose here required, as much actual strength is therein sacrificed to ease and comfort, and, indeed, necessarily so, as a man has to ride his horse during a long day and at a fastish pace, nor is he liable to be overbalanced by the use of heavy weapons. Perhaps the hardest test of horsemanship is to ride well a three or four-mile steeple chase, but as everyone conversant with the subject knows, no one attempts to do this with the seat ordinarily adopted in hunting or hacking. Almost the first instruction the tyro is sure to receive from a professional adviser is to let down his stirrups a couple of holes or so. In riding on the flat, a still longer seat is made use of. At polo in the same way, where it is most necessary for the horseman to be part and parcel of his animal, and where he is handicapped in the same way as the trooper, by having only one hand free, the other being occupied with his stick, almost all good players use a longer stirrup than they would in ordinary riding. These three facts, in my opinion, go far to prove that for any great though not sustained effort of horsemanship, the longer style of riding is most suited; and I consider the aim of cavalry horsemanship is to give him the strongest seat at a time when the trooper may require the active use of his weapons on the field of battle, and not merely to make him as comfortable as possible when on the march or on parade. I cannot help thinking you are wrong in blaming "the not being allowed to rise in his stirrups" as a frequent cause of rupture. Since the dismissal from the service of the ultra long stirrup in use before the present regulations were adopted, I expect cases have been extremely few, and then generally owing to a predisposition of the subject to that form of disease, and which might have been occasioned by the strain of a horse jumping or falling with him, no matter what length of stirrup he was using at the time. If simply, on the other hand, the mere comfort of the trooper is to be considered, we shall doubtle soon have riding in the school without stirrups, and many other disagreeabilities (so-called) abolished, though the former is possibly the finest training for horsemanship of any kind. The late Capt. Percy Williams, who was well known as a brilliant race-rider and cross-country man, used to attribute his extremely powerful finish entirely to the fact that he rode often many hours daily at a trot on a rough hack with his stirrups up. That we should rise in our stirrups because, as you urge, this style has been adopted by other European cavalry, does not seem to me by any means a good or sufficient reason, as I have some acquaintance with and knowledge of cavalry in other services than our own, and have not yet perceived that we have anything to learn from them in the matter of riding, but rather the reverse. Having served throughout the recent Afghan Campaign, where the cavalry work was often extremely arduous, and conducted over the roughest possible country, I had an opportunity of judging, which only confirmed me in the opinion expressed above, and which had previously been the outcome of some observation of and great fondness for military and every other kind of horsemanship. I hope that the officer on Lord Wolseley's Staff who has so influenced his mind in this matter may be induced to make public the arguments which he used in favour of the contemplated change. I quite agree with you in hoping that the present regulation saddle may be lightened, a thing that has hitherto appeared unattainable, and feel sure that the abolition of the breastplate and crupper will be a good commencement.—I am, &c.,

Army & Navy Gazette.
LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1883.

WHEN the mob of a great city and a colony of foreign residents are in unfriendly relations, a very slight cause may lead to a riot. The murder of a Chinaman at Canton, by a European in the service of the Maritime Customs Commission, whether justifiable on the ground of self-defence or not, very naturally excited the natives, who are always animated by unfriendly feelings towards foreigners, and it is probable that the outbreak would have occurred if the French had never gone to Tonquin or attacked Annam. When the native population of Alexandria were irritated by the collection of foreign men-of-war in their harbour for the purpose of overthrowing the popular Government, a quarrel between a Maltese and a donkey-boy was, as Sir B. Seymour reported, quite sufficient to arouse the murderous passions of the mob. In both cases—at Canton and at Alexandria—the Europeans opened fire on the natives, and, of course, increased the rage and fury of the rioters. Here in Canton there were two distinct acts of violence, which led to the death of two Chinese; as in Egypt, it was a Maltese—at least, so it is said—who shot and killed an Egyptian. We do not think it is fair to attribute the outbreak at Canton to the proceedings of the French. There was quite enough of ill-blood to suffice as a moving power. If a foreigner of a hated colony down at the East End had drowned an Englishman, it is very probable the roughs would turn out to make the most of the occasion. The Chinese troops were late, just as the Egyptians were late at Alexandria, and the same suspicions of sympathy with the mob on the part of the Governor were entertained by the Europeans who applied to him for assistance. At all events, the nine Germans and three English who opened fire on the crowd seem to have defended themselves con spirito, and to have disposed of "four or five Chinese killed and many wounded," without loss to themselves. The Swift and Espoir, the French gunboat Lutin, and five Chinese gunboats moored off the European settlement, guarantee th lives and property of the residents for the time; bu the angry passions which have been evoked by thi most untoward outbreak will, we fear, not subsid so readily, and the relations between natives ar foreigners, never very friendly on the side of t Chinese, will be much strained and endangere

Indeed, it is by no means improbable that if the French were to cave in, as they are advised to do by so many anxious friends, their action would be attributed to fear by the Chinese, and the demeanour of the Celestials towards Europeans would then become still more menacing and insolent. All the more reason is there to hope for peaceful solutions, which will enable us to call on the Chinese authorities to repress the turbulent mobs of their great cities.

The Tel-el-Kebir Anniversary, if it goes on as it has commenced, promises to render our Army ridiculous. What! Crown the Colours of the Guards with laurel for marching in rear of two divisions of Infantry, in an action in which they never fired a round at the enemy, to attack "a rabblement of donkey boys," as one authority who knows Egypt called them!—the Guards, who have such glorious names on their colours which they never think of celebrating at all! It is incredible! Other regiments, we are told, had similar rejoicings and celebrations of this glorious September 13! September 20 will be allowed to pass unnoticed, but the fight on the Alma was something to be proud of. To make Arabi a Napoleon III., and Tel-el-Kebir a Sedan, is truly absurd. The political consequences of the action were, of course, very considerable; the attack on the position was admirably devised, and almost as well executed,—not altogether, for those who were there know best how far from admirable was the conduct of some of those engaged that morning, and what terrible confusion there was caused in the ranks in the few minutes of fighting which occurred at the principal redoubt. But for the Army with two hundred years of the traditions which have made us proud of the men who went out to meet the veteran battalions of the greatest Captains of the world, and who, under Marlborough, Wellington, and other less famous Generals, achieved the most brilliant triumphs in the hard-fought fields which tested the best qualities of soldiers, to exalt their horns and wreathe their colours with laurels for the overthrow of a crowd of armed Fellahs, is almost pitiable!

The two hundred years which have passed over the world since John Sobieski drove off the Turks from Vienna and saved Christendom have been as eventful, perhaps, as any period of equal duration since the Creation, always excepting the century which saw the birth of our Lord and the fall of the Roman Republic. What an immense space there is between the England of to-day and that of Charles II. and James II., between the Scotland which gave the Stuart Kings to England and sold them to English rebels, and the Scotland of Queen Victoria at Balmoral and Mr. Gladstone in Midlothian,—nay, even between the Ireland of a fierce and factious Parliament, which did nothing for the Irish but oppress them, and the Ireland of Mr. Parnell and Earl Spencer!

Colonel R. T. Thynne, Grenadier Guards, vacates his appointment as Deputy-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General at Malta, and returns to duty.

Sir H. F. H. B. Maxse, whose death has been announced this week, was a favourable specimen of the Light Dragoon officer of the Crimean period. When he retired into private life he devoted himself to the cultivation of his powers as a littérateur and as an actor with considerable success, and in the seclusion of Heligoland, where he ruled as Lieutenant-Governor and Governor nearly twenty years, to the terror of gamblers and the great comfort of the more pleasant and respectable German and other visitors, he made many friends out of heterogeneous materials. His political views differed widely from those of his Naval relative, who distinguished himself long ago by his ride from Head-quarters, after the Alma, to the seaside, in order to acquaint Admiral Dundas that the Allies were moving round to the south side of Sebastopol, and who has become an advanced, if not an advancing Liberal. Sir H. Maxse will be greatly regretted.

Mr. G. A. Oliphant has been appointed Principal Veterinary-Surgeon in India.

It is very doubtful whether any editor, however just or judicious, can edit a man's letters so as to protect his memory from imputations of some sort or other. A correspondent of the Standard calls attention to a letter of Count Cavour from the "Lettere edite e inedite, di Camillo Cavour, raccolte, &c., da Luigi Chiala, Turin, 1882," in which Cavour, writing to Della Marmora of the negotiations for the marriage of the Princess Clotilde with Prince Napoleon and of his visit to Plombières, says, "I left it with a mind more at ease. If the King consents to the match, I have a belief, nay, I will say a certainty, that within two years you will enter Vienna at the head of our victorious army." The Austrians of to-day may well point to such passages as proofs of the design of Cavour not only to unify Italy, but to destroy the House of Hapsburg and dismember their empire. However, the Italians did not enter Vienna. Not only that, they did not cross the Alps, and in 1866 the old Archduke Albrecht gave them a drubbing at Custozza, which was a pretty commentary on the boast, "Italia fara da se." It was to France, when Napoleon III. interfered to save her from the victors of Königgrätz and Presburg, that Austria yielded the Quadilateral and Venice, and not to Piedmontese or Italian; and history will recall for ever the memory of that action, of the saving claws of the rather crippled and enfeebled eagle, which the Italians are apt to think was a bird of prey of the most predatory habits and unprincipled appetites. The incidents at the recent meeting of the Austrian and French Military Attachés in Italy, at the manœuvres, where there was a fraternization of the enemies of 1859 over the "ossuary" of the French soldiers who fell at Montebello, and General Fabre expressed the hope that if they met again on the field of battle it would be as friends, are very significant, and can scarcely be agreeable to the Italians.

Lieutenant-General Sir Archibald Alison, Bart., K.C.B., commanding the Aldershot Division, has been granted special leave of absence for one month from this date. Lieutenant-General Sir Frederick Fitz-Wygram, Bart., will command the division during Sir Archibald's absence.

If a tithe of what is said about the Depôt, Army Hospital Corps, at Aldershot, be true, this depôt must be, indeed, a happy family. Major-General Walker, V.C., C.B., recently carried out the annual inspection of the corps, and the alarms, excursions, and preliminary preparations for this inspection are said to have been something the like of which has never before been seen at Aldershot. The action of individuals full of burning zeal, very much misdirected, who seem to believe that constant drill and incessant petty regimental worry are the first essentials in the training of Army Hospital Corps men, is bearing fruit. Barrack square and barrack-room soldiering has been carried to such extremes as to impair the real efficiency of the corps, which, as seems strangely to be forgotten, is an hospital corps, whose legitimate duties are to be found within the hospital—almost anywhere, in fact, but on parade.

The 10th Hussars change from Lucknow to England; 17th Lancers, from Mhow to Lucknow; 6th Dragoons or 7th Dragoon Guards, on arrival in India, to Mhow.

We are very glad to see that the Government has sent such an excellent representative body of officers to report on the French manœuvres as those who were received the other day at the War Office in Paris. The remarks we made on the fitness of Colonel Villiers to report on the Cavalry manœuvres were based on the announcement that he would be alone. As a judge of infantry tactics and field work, Colonel Villiers would be quite competent. The "assistance" at the German manœuvres from our Army will be very brilliant. Two Royal Field-Marshals and a great body of officers will be present, among them some very distinguished and competent men, and we hope they will take pains to ascertain how far the German system can justify recent changes in our Army, and with what success our efforts at imitating it are likely to be crowned.

Captain J. F. Ingles, 62nd Regiment, has been appointed A.D.C. to Major-General G. S. Young, Belfast.

Most of our readers who are interested in the condition and improvement of the Yeomanry Cavalry should read an able paper, by Major C. J. Edwards, 2nd West York Yeomanry Cavalry, entitled, "The Yeomanry Cavalry Considered as an Auxiliary and a Reserve Force," which is included in No. CXX. of the Journal of the Royal United Service Institution, the last number issued to the members. The above copy of the Journal also contains some other interesting papers, and four notices of books, the most important of which are, "Suggestions on the Transport of the Future," by Lieutenant-Colonel C. E. Webber, C.B., R.E.; "The Protection of Our Naval Base in the North Pacific," by Major-General Laurie; and "The Latest Development of the Tactics of the Three Arms," by Colonel C. B. Brackenbury, R.A.

A General Order has just been issued "showing the state of education in the Army at home in 1882," in the form of a Return, showing the strength of regiments or corps on January 1, 1883, the number of pass certificates in their possession, and the number obtained in the preceding year. The Return is summarised as follows:—Total strength of the Army at home on January 1, 1883, 87,297; total certificated, including those gained in 1882, 50,833. Per-centage uncertificated, 42·18; certificates gained in 1882, 15,311. These certificates are given in four graduated standards, and the 15,311 for 1882 are made up of 95 first class, 2,465 second class, 4,573 third class, and 8,178 fourth class. Having regard to the very low standard of education required to obtain a fourth-class certificate, and the facilities afforded to the men of attending Army schools, the most striking feature on the face of this Return appears to us to be the appalling fact that 42·18 per cent. of the Army are uncertificated. With a view to ascertaining whether this state of things is normal in the Army, or, if not, whether the uncertificated per-centage was diminishing or increasing, we referred back to the Returns issued on this subject in 1881 and 1882, in order to compare the state of things existing in those years with that existing now. But so diverse appear to be the methods of preparing, from year to year, the returns on this subject, which, to be of real service, should always appear in an exactly similar form, that it almost seems as if orders had been issued to those preparing them that care should be taken to do it in such a manner as to preclude the possibility of useful comparison. However, by ascertaining the per-centages borne by the numbers in the various grades to the total numbers certificated in the three years, we find that, while the numbers in the second and third classes remain comparatively stationary, there has been a steady and appreciable increase each year in the first and fourth classes. This, so far, is decidedly satisfactory, and, we believe, shows a slow but at the same time a sure improvement in the educational status of the soldier. Admitting, however, that the education of the Army is becoming more satisfactory, the fact still remains that, in this age of School Boards for the education of the children before they become soldiers, and of Army schools for their education after enlistment, out of 87,297 men, only 50,833 have any certificates whatever, a large majority of which are fourth class only, while 36,464 are uncertificated. This is certainly a state of things which calls loudly for the earnest consideration of the Director-General of Military Education.

Hospital accommodation for officers has been provided at the following stations at home:—Devonport, Dublin, Netley, and Woolwich; and abroad, at Gibraltar, Malta, and Natal. Officers will accordingly be admitted to these hospitals, under the provisions of the regulations for the Army Medical Department.

Extract from a letter from a Staff officer:—"We have just finished the inspection, and a more pitiful sight than the recruits of the depôts were I never saw. The only fairly-sized ones were the . . . . . . lot. The amusing part of it is that it is quite the exception when a man enlists in his own county regiment."

Lieutenant Edwards, a probationer for the Bengal Staff Corps, has been brought back into his old regiment, the 66th, after an absence of three years. Accordingly, Lieutenant Edwards now stands second on the list of Lieutenants of the 66th, from which he has been absent for three years. It seems rather hard on the Subalterns of the 66th who have been doing duty with the regiment in Lieutenant Edwards's absence, that their promotion should be put back to suit the convenience of a senior who, after failing to qualify for the Staff Corps, returns to his old regiment to reap the benefit of his seniority. The case serves to show the necessity which exists for some limit to be placed on the period during which an officer can be attached on probation to a Native regiment in India.

The vacancy on the Ordnance Committee at the War Office will, it is said, be filled by Lieutenant-Colonel F. G. Baylay.

We venture to recommend to Lord Hartington's notice and consideration the suggestions of a "General Officer," published in our columns to-day, under the heading of "Our Boys."

We understand that the Medical officers who were so fortunate as to serve in the late Egyptian Campaign are to count their years, or, in many cases, less than a year's service abroad, as a tour of foreign service. As a natural consequence, Medical officers are being sent abroad this trooping season, after having spent less than two years in England, who have served their full term of five years in India or elsewhere, whilst many who were compelled to remain in India a sixth year on account of the Afghan Campaign, and who passed the last two years on active service, have also been sent abroad out of their turn. In all other Departments, the tour in Egypt is not to count as a tour of foreign service. We fail to see, therefore, why an exception is made in favour of the Medical officers. If the rule affected all Departments alike, there would be no cause for complaint. As it is, it is not to be wondered at that those who are being ordered abroad should feel that they are being unfairly dealt with, and that more consideration ought to be shown to them.

Inspecting Veterinary-Surgeon J. J. Meyrick, C.B., has been appointed to the War Office, on the staff of the Principal Veterinary-Surgeon.

Major-General Sir Frederick Roberts, who was gazetted a Lieutenant-General on Tuesday last, makes a pretty considerable jump, as he passes over the heads of thirty-three senior Major-Generals; but no favour has been shown him, as he was entitled to the step by right of seniority on the Indian list of the Royal Artillery.

At the manœuvres yesterday (Friday) morning, at Wimbledon, the troops, had not a single round of ammunition. Colonel Phillips handled his force splendidly. He had to get his convoy, with the aid of three squadrons of the 4th Hussars and a handful of Infantry, across the difficult ground from a point near Kingston Vale to Wimbledon, and did it so effectually as to lead to the impression that the enemy would, in real warfare, have suffered terribly. It was the smartest performance which has been witnessed in the Home District this season.

Audacious, Capt. Tracey, flagship of Vice-Admiral G. O. Willes, C.B., with the Cleopatra, Curaçoa, Pegasus, Albatross, Daring, Linnet, and Vigilant, were at Chefoo on July 23, and would leave about Aug. 1 for Nagasaki, thence to Russian ports in Gulf of Tartary. Champion, Capt. A. T. Powlett, arrived at Batavia on Saturday last, and left the following day for Sunda Straits.

Dragon, Com. Bolitho, left Zanzibar on July 15. All went well, writes a correspondent, until July 21, when it was found necessary to put into Port Robinson, on the coast of Madagascar, to make good defects. She left again on July 25, and having to steam against a strong trade wind, found the supply of coal running short on July 30. Com. Bolitho then put into St. Marie, the French Naval depôt, and finally reached Tamatave on Aug. 1. Here the Dryad was found at anchor. She had just returned from a cruise round the north of Madagascar, Nossi Bé, Majonga, and other places on the coast. The Dragon was having her boilers repaired at Zanzibar, by last accounts, dated Aug. 6.

Dryad, Com. Johnstone, left Tamatave in July, for the purpose of ballasting a schooner with sand, after having taken out the provisions and stores brought in her to Tamatave for the Dryad and Dragon. Prior to leaving the anchorage, Com. Johnstone gave notice to Admiral Pierre of his intention, as also of the purpose of his shifting berth. The French Admiral sent the Forfait and Beautemps Beauprés to watch the movements of the Dryad. These two ships ranged up on either beam of the Dryad, and cleared for action. They sent machine-guns aloft in their tops, and when the Dryad anchored, took up positions ahead and astern of her. The Dryad had 90 tons of coal on deck, and only one gun free for action. A French officer landed, and watched the work of the Dryad's landing party digging sand, and when satisfied, returned to his ship, when both French vessels weighed and proceeded to their former anchorage. The Ranger arrived at Tamatave on Saturday, Aug. 4, from the Mauritius, where she had left Sir William Hewett, V.C., in the Euryalus and the Tourmaline. The French Admiral at once placed the Ranger in quarantine. This was rather awkward, as she had brought despatches and stores for the Dryad. Com. Johnstone solved the difficulty at once, by placing himself in quarantine also. He hoisted the "yellow Jack" at the fore of the Dryad, and communicated forthwith with the Ranger. Prior to so doing, he gave the Dragon her sailing orders and his mails for England, and sent her to sea. This conduct sorely annoyed Admiral Pierre, who found himself checkmated by Com. Johnstone's ready resources.

Euphrates, Capt. C. S. Cardale, left Portsmouth on Saturday for Bombay, by way of the Cape, with drafts for India.

Fantôme, Com. Grey, was at Port Royal on Aug. 25, making good defects, and would proceed on Sept. 28 to relieve the Griffon on the coast of Haiti.

Frolic, Com. Moore, sailed on Wednesday for the West Coast of Africa.

Griffon, Com. Davies, was at Port-au-Prince on Aug. 17, and will be relieved by the Fantôme.

Hecla, Capt. Wilson, was prevented from proceeding with the Channel Squadron to Portland, in consequence of defects which necessitate repairs to the pistons of main engines, and torpedo-boats. When made good, she will join the Mediterranean Squadron.

Himalaya, Capt. H. St. L. B. Palliser, will leave Hamoaze on Monday and proceed to Portsmouth, return to Plymouth, and proceed to Queenstown, where further drafts will be embarked. The ship will then proceed direct to Malta, effect some changes in the Mediterranean garrisons, and then return to Portsmouth. Immediately afterwards she will proceed to Bermuda, Halifax, and other places on the North American and West Indies station. She will then again return to Portsmouth, when she will be despatched to China and East Indies ports, conveying new crews for the Champion and other ships under the command of Vice-Admiral G. O. Willes, C.B. The Himalaya, which only started on her present commission in January last, has already traversed 32,000 miles in trooping service. It is expected that before this famous troopship has been at sea 12 months, under the command of Capt. Palliser, she will have covered 50,000 miles.

Humber, Capt. Hawkins, has received orders to leave Sheerness to-day for the Mediterranean, with stores for the Fleet.

Mallard, Lieut. and Com. Littledale, left Jamaica on Sept. 10.

Minotaur, Capt. Fellowes, flagship of Sir W. Dowell, accompanied by the Channel Squadron, steamed into Portland Harbour on Friday evening last, after exercise the whole day at steam tactics and general quarters. The Squadron is expected to remain at Portland for several weeks.

Moorhen, Lieut. and Com. Corfe, left Suez on Sept. 11 on passage home.

Opal, Capt. A. T. Brooke, with the Algerine, Bullfrog, and Starling, was to leave Fernando Po on Aug. 2, calling at St. Thomas, Loango, Kabenda, and arrive at Congo on Aug. 17, leaving on Aug. 20, and calling at St. Paul de Loando, Elephant's Bay, Little Fish Bay, and St. Helena, arriving there on Sept. 23, and leaving again on Oct. 7, to arrive at Ascension on Oct. 13, leaving on Aug. 27 for Cape Coast Castle, to arrive on Nov. 7. The Bullfrog would leave Fernando Po with the Opal, the Algerine would join on the southern division, and the Starling at St. Helena.

Swiftsure, Capt. Aitchison, flagship of Rear-Admiral Lyons, was at Esquimault on Aug. 18. On Aug. 16 a court-martial was held on board, under the presidency of Capt. Blackburne, of the Heroine, for the trial of the following prisoners, all of the Swiftsure:—Wm. McNeil, gunner, R.M.A., and Timothy Delaney, bandsman, pleaded guilty to a charge of attempted desertion—they were apprehended at Victoria in disguise—and were sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment with hard labour. W. Gilmore and W. McGinty, ordinary seamen, were charged with desertion, and, pleading guilty, were sentenced, Gilmour to 18, and McGinty to 12 months' imprisonment. These two men were apprehended in disguise on board a steamer which was on the point of sailing for America. Henry Brown and W. Shepheard, ordinary seamen, for refusing duty and using insubordinate language to their superior officer, were awarded two years' imprisonment each. John Miller, an able seaman, for a similar offence was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, and dismissed the service with disgrace; while Hugh Burridge, ordinary seaman, for refusing to obey the orders of Com. Mainwaring, and using highly insubordinate and threatening language towards that officer, was adjudged to be kept in penal servitude for five years, and then to be dismissed the service with disgrace. His previous character had been very bad. The Mutine was to leave on Aug. 20 for the south, taking time-expired men, invalids, and prisoners for transfer to the Comus for passage to England, on her being relieved by the Satellite.

Tyne, Com. Cochrane, embarked supernumeraries and drafts at Portsmouth, and sailed on Tuesday for Gibraltar, St. Helena, Cape of Good Hope, and the Mauritius.

Valorous, Capt. W. Stewart, is to join the Squadron at Portland.

Portland, September 13.

The two divisions of the Channel Squadron met off Portland on Friday morning last, the 7th, having left Spithead and Plymouth Sound the previous evening. The forenoon was spent in exercising at steam tactics, and in the afternoon the squadron stood in, and moored in the usual man-of-war anchorage in Portland Roads. After fine weather on Saturday and Sunday, heavy rain on Monday prevented us from carrying out our usual sail or spar drill, so we went to general quarters instead, that the forenoon might not be thrown away. Since then we have been exercising small-arm and field-piece crews on shore. Battalions of small-arm men and field-pieces with their crews were landed on Tuesday and Wednesday from the different ships for independent instruction and exercise, and this forenoon they were all landed together, and we had a regular field-day. There were three battalions of six companies, each of twenty-five files, and two batteries of field-pieces. The Admiral inspected the men on their arrival on the ground, and watched the subsequent operations, which consisted of working along the hill-side, under the Verne Fort, in the direction of a supposed enemy. One battalion opened out in skirmishing order, another acting as support, and the third in reserve, with a battery of field guns on either flank. After advancing for some time, during which the men were exercised at forming rallying and company squares, dismounting field guns, &c., the leading battalion was supposed to be compelled to retire and form up in the rear; the battalion which had been in reserve then moved up in support of the one in front; and after a further advance a charge was made at the supposed position of the enemy, which it is needless to say was gallantly carried. The men then marched off the ground, and returned to their ships. The day was fine and bright, and there were a large number of spectators. It was altogether a pretty sight, and passed off most successfully. The Valorous called in here on Monday evening, and left next morning for Plymouth. She returned this morning on her way back to Portsmouth, and leaves this evening. Last night a general signal was made to the effect that we would probably leave this on Monday week for a week's cruise, but would not leave England. The railway and steamboat authorities are doing all they can to make our stay here agreeable, as they are running special boats and trains at cheap rates to suit our convenience. We have quite settled down into our usual routine of 8 o'clock evolutions, &c., after our short break, while giving leave at Portsmouth and Plymouth.

THE CLYDE COURT-MARTIAL.

Sir,—It is currently reported that in the absence of Sir Staveley Hill in America, the Admiralty have directed Mr. Swainson to draw up and lay the case of Com. F. Maxwell-Heron before the Law Officers of the Crown. If this information be correct, surely it is most unfair to the late commander of the Clyde, as, by all accounts, Mr. Swainson is prejudiced against that unfortunate officer, and, I would remind you, has been most zealous in the general "hunt." Will you in all justice raise your powerful voice against this great injustice, and give another proof to the service in general of your love of fair-play?—

I am, &c., R. N.

The following men have been awarded the medal for long service and good conduct:—William Dart and Joseph Honnihull, privates, R.M., of the Indus; William Wonnacott, gunner's mate, of the Impregnable; Thomas E. Reviews.

Major-General Sir Frederick Roberts, V.C. By Charles Rathbone Low. (W. H. Allen and Co.)

The work compiled by Mr. Low is a memoir of a soldier who, yet in the prime of life, has acquired a splendid reputation. It is much to be regretted that some one specially qualified for the task was not entrusted with its accomplishment. Mr. Low is an old sailor, belonging to the extinct navy of whose glorious deeds he was an excellent if somewhat verbose historian, and he has made his name familiar to the public as a biographer of eminent people as they attract notice; but he lacks some of the best qualities which are needed in that style of composition, and he rarely succeeds in making the reader acquainted with the personality of his hero. The record of the career of Sir Frederick Roberts required nothing more than simple, plain, unvarnished narration. Sir Frederick Roberts, it is to be hoped, will live long, to protect the future of his country. He has already achieved a place in the military history of England which he is not likely to forfeit. He gained his position not by favour nor by lucky coincidences, but by the earnest, untiring zeal which characterises him. When Shere Ali was led to take up a position which was regarded as a direct challenge, and three columns were formed for the invasion of Afghanistan, General Roberts was entrusted with the operations in the Kurrum Valley. That was the turning-point in his career, for the admirable manner in which he discharged the onerous duties that were cast upon him brought him at one leap into the rank of the best approved commanders. The march into the Kurrum Valley and the capture of the Peiwar Kotal was a splendid achievement; but they sank almost into insignificance, when compared with those which so immediately followed,—the advance across the Shutargardan to Cabul, with the battle of Charasia, and the wonderful march from Cabul to Candahar, which the great German strategists admire. It is stated that of these three achievements, General Roberts considered the second as the greatest in its results. It may be so, but there are many who will not hesitate to accord the palm to that brilliant march, through a wild, barren country, infested with a hostile population, only waiting and hoping for some check which would crush the British forces. But Roberts acted with his usual caution, and made his preparations with masterly exactness. The march, which will remain one of the landmarks in the military history of England, was accomplished in the face of fearful difficulties, and the soldier who planned it and carried it out so successfully, pausing scarcely for an hour after he had relieved the place, completed his work and at once marched forth and crushed for ever the victorious army of Ayoob. As we have already observed, the history of such a man as Frederick Roberts deserves a very competent biographer. We have no wish to question Mr. Low's earnestness and ability; they are quite apparent. But he has done a little too much book-making, and he has, in fact, given the world a compilation rather than a history of the General's life. He is very copious, and he persists in introducing observations and quotations and rejoinders which are altogether out of season in a book like this; but with all these defects, the interest in the subject matter will secure for the work a large circle of readers here and in India.

Obituary.

Admiral Sir Richard Collinson, K.C.B. (retired), Deputy Master of the Trinity Corporation, died on Wednesday at his residence, Haven Green, Ealing. He was born in 1811, at Gateshead, of which place his father was rector. He entered the Navy in 1823, was employed in various surveying expeditions under Capt. Belcher and others from 1831 to 1839, took an active part in the first Chinese war, remaining afterwards four years on the China coast, making plans of harbours and laying down the coast-line. He commanded the expedition, consisting of the Enterprise and Investigator, despatched by the Admiralty in 1850 in search of Sir John Franklin and his companions, and on his return to England, in 1854, Capt. Collinson received the medal of the Royal Geographical Society for his explorations in Arctic regions. He received his promotion to flag rank in 1862, was elected an Elder Brother of the Trinity House in the same year, and has been Deputy Master of that Corporation since 1875.

Col. E. T. Shiffner, commanding the 35th Regimental District, Chichester, died at St. Aldhelm's, Swanage, on the 8th inst., aged 55 years. The deceased, who was third son of the late Rev. Sir G. Shiffner, Bart., of Coombe Place, Sussex, entered the Army Dec. 31, 1847; became lieut., Dec. 31, 1847; capt., Feb. 15, 1856; served in Oude, in 1858 (medal); major, July 27, 1866; brevet lieut.-col., Dec. 25, 1877; lieut.-col., 54th Regt., Nov. 14, 1877; col., Dec. 22, 1880; and succeeded to the command of the Chichester Regimental District, Sept. 18, 1882.

A portion of the troops at Aldershot were put through a practical course of musketry on Wednesday and Thursday. No spectators were allowed near the line, defined by two squadrons of cavalry, on the north, from Miles Hill to Claycart Hill; on the east, from Claycart Hill to Hungry Hill; on the west, from Miles Hill to Heath Cottage; and on the south, from Heath Cottage to Upper Hale and Hungry Hill. Dummies were arranged, 100 oval frames, 14 in. by 10 in., covered with canvas; 30 oblong frames, 6 ft. by 2 ft., covered with canvas; 10 wooden figures, with props, standing; 80 kneeling, 100 head and shoulders, and one dummy gun were arranged. When the dispositions of the attacking force, under Major-Gen. Walker, were completed, the officers and men under their charge were told the object in view and the way in which it was to be carried out; the necessity of the fire being completely under the control of the section-leaders, who were to designate the men to fire, and to see that they attended properly to the elevation necessary at the different distances was insisted on. It was also explained that all the firing was to be done slowly. After the first stage, the fighting-line was reinforced by supports, and after the second stage by the main body, and at the end of each stage the officers commanding companies had the rounds expended counted. A note was also made by section commanders of the estimated distances at the beginning and end of the respective stages. Range-finders were used to ascertain the distances, and the drill and shooting appeared to give much satisfaction. At the end of each stage, the officers detailed for the shooting, acting under the orders of the D.A.A.G. for Musketry, examined the dummies and made a record of the hits. A report of the operations as carried out, together with a sketch map on a scale of 8 in. to the mile, showing the position attacked and the position of the troops on the "cease fire" sounding at the end of each stage, is to be forwarded by the General Officer Commanding to the Assistant-Adjutant-General, by the 20th inst., for the information of Gen. Sir Archibald Alison. The report is to supply full particulars as to the dispositions made, mode of carrying out the attack, and result of the firing, together with any other information calculated to throw light on the proceedings.

Amusements.

At Drury Lane, where the spectacular drama of "Freedom," in the sixth week of its career, continues to attract a large nightly attendance, a slight farcical piece called "The Opera Cloak" has been brought out, as a prelude to the more substantial entertainment of the evening. A letter left in the pocket of an opera cloak, lent by one married lady to another, and containing nothing more than a record of the hour appointed for a bandmaster to attend a quadrille party, becomes the cause of much groundless jealousy among two elderly husbands and a fire-eating colonel, who suspect the faithfulness of their respective wives. Everything is of, course, soon explained; and with the assistance of Mr. Harry Nicholls as the bandmaster, Mr. Harry Jackson, Mr. Henry George, and Mr. John Ridley, as the infuriated husbands, and Miss Fanny Enson, Miss M. A. Victor, and Miss Alice Denvil, as the unjustly accused wives, a sufficient amount of merriment is created. Unusual care has been bestowed on the stage appliances of the one scene which suffices for the action. The piece is an adaptation, by Mr. Powles and Mr. Augustus Harris, of a French vaudeville.

The Globe Theatre has been reopened, under the joint management of Mr. John Hollingshead and Mr. J. L. Shine, with Mr. Sydney Grundy's comedy of "The Glass of Fashion," which was first played in the provinces last March. The chief merit of the production is to be found in the briskness of the dialogue, which secures interest for a weak plot. The satire of the author is mainly directed against the influence of a supposed "Society journal," endowed with the title of the play. Miss Lingard here impersonates the heroine, Mrs. Trevanion; Miss Lottie Venne gives a humorous portraiture of the volatile sister, Peg O'Reilly; and Mr. Shine and Mr. Smily amusingly represent the proprietor and editor of the fashionable periodical. The scheming adventurer Borowski is now a very conspicuous personage, as cleverly pourtrayed by Mr. Beerbohm Tree. On the first night of representation at the Globe Theatre, a large mantelpiece and mirror, shown in the drawing-room scene of the last act, came heavily down upon the stage, happily without injury to any of the performers, but the unlucky effects of breaking glass have been since much discussed among believers in omens.

Miss Kate Vaughan, being about to commence a provincial tour, has signalised by a special morning performance at the Gaiety her secession from that burlesque company with which her name has been so long associated. Appearing as Peggy in a revised version of the old comedy of "The Country Girl," and as Cinderella in a new rendering by Mr. R. Reece of the familiar fairy-story, Miss Kate Vaughan won the favour of a large audience, taking every opportunity of bestowing plaudits and bouquets.

Mr. Henry Irving has arranged to remain at the Royal Lyceum Theatre, Edinburgh, until Sept. 22. He will then appear for a fortnight at the Alexandra Theatre, Liverpool. The date fixed for his first performance at the Star Theatre, New York, is Oct. 29.

The St. James's Theatre will be opened for the season on Monday next with the play of "Impulse," which has proved so attractive during Messrs. Hare and Kendal's provincial tour.

Madame Franziska Ellmenreich, an eminent German actress, of whose talent report speaks in the highest terms, will make her début on the English Stage at the Gaiety Theatre at a special matinée, on Wednesday, the 26th inst. Madame Ellmenreich is said to have a wonderful command of the English tongue, and has already played in our language in California with the greatest possible success, in such rôles as Camille, Marie Stuart, Adrienne Lecouvreur, &c. The critics write of her as "a great actress, majestic and powerful, and at the same time subtle in portraying the most delicate shades of human passion."

The Duke of Cambridge will leave Copenhagen on the 16th inst., for Wiesbaden, in order to attend the German Military Manœuvres.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, Esq., 33 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, London.

Dear Sir,—We embrace this opportunity of congratulating you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine, Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne, has earned for itself, not only in Hindostan, but all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported into the country, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.
Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff), discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of

COUGHS, ASTHMA, COLDS,
BRONCHITIS,
EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,
PALPITATION, HYSTERIA,

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

THE PARCELS POST.—THE PARCELS POST AND TEA.

THE PARCELS POST and the DELIVERY of TEA.

THE PARCELS POST and the DISTRIBUTION of TEA to every place where there is a Post-Office in the United Kingdom.

THE PARCELS POST.—TEA of the highest excellence (as supplied to Dukes, Earls, Barons, and the County Families of England), sent free by Parcels Post in quantities of 4 lb., 5 lb., and 6 lb., to any postal address in the United Kingdom, on receipt of a remittance for the price of the Tea and 3d.

THUS 4 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA can be sent to any address free, by post, on receipt of 8s 3d. Thus 6 lb. of Half-Crown Tea can be sent free of post on receipt of 15s 3d. Thus 5 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea can be sent free of post on receipt of 15s 3d.

THE POSTAL LIMIT of 7 lb. will only really cover 6 lb. of Tea, as the weight of paper and twine has to be deducted, so that COOPER COOPER and CO. will send 6 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea free of post for 18s 3d, or 6 lb. of Two-and-Sixpenny Tea free of post for 15s 3d, or 6 lb. of Two-Shilling Tea free of post for 12s 3d.

PACKAGES containing 20 lb., 60 lb., or 100 lb. of TEA will be sent to any railway station in England absolutely free of carriage on receipt of remittance for the value of the tea.

THE PARCELS POST.—4 lb., 5 lb., or 6 lb. of TEA will be delivered free of charge at your own houses by the postman, for 3d in addition to the cost of the tea.

THUS 4 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA will be delivered free at your own house for a remittance of 8s 3d. Thus 5 lb. of Two-Shilling Tea will be delivered free at your own door for a Post-Office Order for 10s 3d. Thus 6 lb. of Two-Shilling Tea will be sent free to your own homes for a cheque for 12s 3d.

THE PARCELS POST.—4 lb., 5 lb., or 6 lb. of THREE-SHILLING TEA despatched to any part of England, Wales, Scotland, or Ireland, by post for 3d in addition to the price of the Tea.

THUS 4 lb. of THREE-SHILLING TEA can be sent to the remotest address on receipt of remittance for 12s 3d. Thus 5 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea will be forwarded to any place where letters are delivered, postage paid, for 15s 3d. Thus 6 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea will be sent to any address in any postal district in these islands for 18s 3d.

TEAS of all descriptions on COOPER COOPER and CO.'S LIST, posted in parcels containing 4 lb., 5 lb., and 6 lb. each by parcels post to any part of England, Wales, Ireland, or Scotland, in exchange for cash (in registered envelope). Post-Office Orders, cheques, postal orders, or stamps for the value of the tea, and 3d extra.

FOR example, a Package containing 4 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA can be sent to any place in the United Kingdom in exchange for 8s 3d in cash, enclosed in a registered envelope, and addressed to any of COOPER COOPER and CO.'S establishments in London.

OR, a Parcel containing 6 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA can be delivered by parcels post, carriage free, by remitting a Post-Office Order for 12s 3d.

OR, 5 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA will be despatched, free of post, for a postal order for 10s, and three penny postage stamps.

THUS, in the same manner, THREE-SHILLING TEA in parcels to the value of 12s 3d, 15s 3d, and 18s 3d each, containing respectively 4 lb., 5 lb., and 6 lb. of tea, will be sent on receipt of postal orders, cheques, or cash for the several amounts.

CO-OPERATION. — COOPER COOPER and CO. also invite attention to the new System of Co-operation in the purchase of Tea by persons living in the country through the medium of the Parcels Post.

CO-OPERATION.—Thus, as COOPER COOPER and CO. are enabled to send packages containing 6 lb. of any of the Choice TEAS on their List to any place in the United Kingdom for 3d, it follows that if six families in a village are willing to club together, each can have a pound of tea sent for one halfpenny.

CO-OPERATION.—Or, as two parcels containing 6 lb. each can be sent for 6d, six families would be enabled, by joining together in one remittance, to order 2 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA each, at a cost of one penny only, in addition to the price of the tea.

CO-OPERATION.—This system will apply to every kind of TEA offered for Sale by COOPER COOPER and CO., and if followed out will practically enable them to place before customers in every county town and village in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, in the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man, in the Hebrides, and the Orkneys, Tea of the same choice kinds as sold in their various Establishments in London, at the same prices, with the addition of the nominal sum of one halfpenny a pound.

THERE is a portion of the Royal Warrant of March 11, 1882, to the working of which we would draw attention, as the system, or rather want of system, now obtaining, often entails great hardship upon individual officers. We refer to those Articles of the Warrant which deal with provisional promotion, and the supersession of officers who have not qualified for promotion. The Warrant lays down that except "under very special circumstances," an officer, though he be the senior of his rank, cannot be promoted, unless he shall have passed the qualifying examination for the higher rank. Between July 1, 1881, and the present time there have apparently been a great many officers who, by "very special circumstances," have been prevented from qualifying, for many senior, unqualified officers have been promoted provisionally. In fact, we believe it is now the custom to give every unqualified officer an opportunity of making out a case for provisional promotion, before steps are taken to supersede him. This, although it perhaps presses somewhat severely upon the qualified officer, is, so long as the Warrant admits provisional promotion, perfectly just to the officer who is warned that he is about to be superseded. It has, however, come to our knowledge on more than one occasion that the same, or very similar, arguments in favour of provisional promotion used by two different officers have been differently treated. In one case, the wished-for promotion has been obtained; in another, the application has been refused. This happy-go-lucky arrangement is by no means calculated to produce that contentment which is so necessary in an officer who is expected to take a zealous interest in the service. For, in one case, the junior officer who, though qualified, sees the promotion given to his senior who is not qualified, is tempted to inquire why he himself should have taken the trouble to qualify until he had actually obtained promotion, and was certain of the position for which he was qualifying; while, in the other, the officer whose claims to provisional promotion have been refused, will naturally be far from satisfied when he discovers that some other officer has been granted a privilege which has been denied to him. There is another phase of this question which is still more important. That is, the question of "succeeding" officers who, after having been promoted provisionally, have presented themselves for examination, and have failed to qualify for their new rank. It becomes the duty of the War Office authorities to call upon an officer thus situated to make his choice between immediate retirement, and the cancelling of the promotion which had been conceded to him "provisionally, subject to his passing the prescribed examination on the first available opportunity." Now, in some cases, we have noticed that it takes months to make this election; in one, it was actually more than six months after the date of examination before the officer's promotion was cancelled and his successor appointed. We are quite prepared to admit that such an election is a serious crisis in an officer's career; but nevertheless, we should imagine that a decision might be arrived at in a few weeks at the outside, instead of a few months. Of course, if the cancelling of the promotion was absolute, that is to say, re-created the vacancy from the original date, the successor would have little or no ground for complaint. But the Warrant distinctly lays down that "the date of the promotion or appointment of the officer selected to succeed the officer who has failed to qualify, shall not bear a date prior to the day after that in which the provisional promotion was cancelled, or the officer placed on retired pay." Consequently, every day's delay after the date on which it is known that the provisionally promoted officer has failed is a day's seniority lost to his successor, and, if the delay is unreasonably prolonged, soon becomes a serious consideration. In one case, so long was the delay that was occasioned, that an exchange was arranged and gazetted between the date of failure of the officer to pass his examination and the cancelling of his promotion, with the result that, as no earlier date than that of the cancelling could be given to the officer who was promoted into the vacancy, the officer so promoted was permanently superseded by an officer who exchanged into the regiment some six months after the vacancy had virtually occurred. This is a matter that calls urgently for reform, and we venture to hope that, attention having once been drawn to the great hardship of delay in these cases, the authorities will see their way to preventing a recurrence of the grievance, for such it really is.

MODERN improvements in Ordnance follow so rapidly upon each other that the gun drill of the Navy is for ever changing. To the Naval officer a thorough knowledge of gunnery is all-important. In the olden days of smooth-bores, once he had passed the Excellent he had no longer to trouble himself about keeping pace with the times. But times have changed, and so have our guns. They are, indeed, ever being altered. It therefore becomes necessary for the Naval officer to keep himself posted in every change made, and to do this effectually, after three years spent abroad, he is forced to go back to the Excellent for a short course of gunnery. This is now an integral part of the career of a Naval officer, if he desires to keep himself efficient and au fait with the numerous improvements that are continually being made, both in the gun and in its drill. It may, therefore, be worth while to consider whether the present course of instruction is adapted to the requirements of the age. Within a comparatively short time, the Staff of the Excellent have dispensed with officers learning the details of musketry instruction, rifle, squad, and company drill, which formerly had to be gone through de novo by officers undergoing the short gunnery course. They are left to study the rifle and field exercises at their leisure. Still, the Naval officer has to remain proficient in those drills, for, when examined, he has to pass in them, and prove that he is able to instruct a company. When so doing, he has himself to handle a rifle, and go through the detail of the different movements, prefixing each motion of the musketry instruction and rifle exercise, with the caution, "in this manner." Every kind of knowledge is valuable, but too much time can be expended in making officers acquire a knowledge of that which they should have learnt thoroughly when midshipmen. The time, too, that is devoted to heavy-gun drill seems excessive, when it is remembered that, although a most important subject, it is one which is continually drilled into subordinate officers from the very commencement of their Naval career. Owing to the time expended on these subjects, others of no less importance, such as handling a battalion, turret-gun drill, and drilling quarters, do not get their fair share of attention, and thus these most important items come to be somewhat neglected. Hardly any attempt is made to enable officers undergoing the short course of gunnery to acquire a knowledge of the duties to be performed when a body of men are landed for service. But scant information is imparted on the subjects of outpost and picket duties, guard mountings, choosing ground for and pitching a camp, or attacking and defending a position, and yet a knowledge of these matters might often prove of great use to Naval officers. It is, however, not so surprising that these soi-disant Military subjects should be left to the unaided ingenuity and assiduity of the individual, when but scant information is imparted in turret-gun drill and drilling quarters, two purely Naval subjects, which are directly affected by each new improvement in Naval ordnance, whether in construction or in mounting. In actual warfare, the occasion will surely often arise when such knowledge as the Excellent now fails to impart would prove of inestimable value. Then the Naval officer has to think of all the many things necessary for the comfort and safety of his men at a time when moments are of the utmost value, and the want of knowledge on these subjects is consequently keenly felt throughout the Service. But if these things are not considered of sufficient importance to deserve any greater attention than is at present accorded to them on board the Excellent, then the short course of gunnery undergone by Lieutenants might advantageously be shortened by at least a fortnight, so as to admit of the officers under instruction being attached for a couple of weeks to a regiment at Aldershot. But even this reform would not make up for the deficient instruction at present imparted to officers in turret and battery drill. Even taken at its best, the short course of gunnery hardly repays officers all the trouble and expense they are put to, and is open to great improvement.

"A GENERAL disarmament," about which the newspapers are exercising themselves in the saison morte, in lieu of the usual phenomena by sea and land in the animal and vegetable kingdoms, appropriate to the time of year, is an impossibility. It is not worth a thought or a discussion, for no sane man entertains the idea that a general disarmament is feasible, ardently as every sensible man must desire to see it. But a reduction, pro ratâ, in the numbers of the Armies of the Great Powers might be effected by general consent, though we think it very likely the Great Powers would not agree over the proportions or mode of reduction, and that the world might be amazed by the sight of a war intended to enforce peace, and of monster armies engaged in conflict with each other in order to produce little ones. One point is clear enough. "Let the galled jades wince!"—Great Britain cannot be called upon to reduce her Army. That work has been done for her at home, and all the efforts of her administrators are directed to prevent the diminution of her forces, and to enable the recruiting officers to procure the supplies for the maintenance of her military power. Guns would not go off of their own accord, if Germany, France, Russia, and Austria were to disarm, retaining only troops to garrison frontier posts and keep internal order. There would not be much danger perhaps of war all of a sudden, but on such occurrences as those in Croatia, in Spain, in Poland recently, and in the effervescences of the pestilential little nationalities, in which all kinds of vanities are simmering up in the silly brains of people who believe they are the descendants of the heroes of Thermopylæ or the children of Roman legionaries, we are confronted by evidence of the strongest kind that a disarmament must be, after all, partial, and not general, and that in the case of every Power in Europe the necessity exists for keeping at hand for use at sight a considerable body of men. For ourselves, there is Ireland close at hand; there are in this island itself secret and destructive associations for the overthrow of institutions at work below the surface; there are the garrisons to protect the points wrested from or unwillingly ceded by other Powers from which are drawn the lines of communication for our trade, and the links of our Imperial chain; and there is the Indian Empire, each and all demanding the constant presence of battalions, which it taxes all our resources to furnish, and leaving very little indeed to veer and haul upon, as sailors say, except the Reserves, which are only to be called upon in war time, and the Volunteers, whose services in the field—full of confidence as we are that the force would fight like Englishmen and die like heroes—could only be available in contingencies the advent of which we should not welcome. No, our Army is always on active service, and has hard work to keep alive under the operating-knives of well-intentioned reforming practitioners. We may, in some measure, form an idea of the feelings with which France would receive a polite request from Germany to send 250,000 men or so to their "foyers," by imagining the effect on ourselves of a modest demand from France to reduce our Navy one-half. There may be a general disarmament. The cry of "Give peace in our time, O Lord!" has gone up to Heaven for nigh nineteen hundred years, but the millennium seems still a long way off, and the hour of disarmament has not yet sounded.

The Admiralty have awarded to Sir Auckland Colvin the clasp, in addition to the Egyptian War medal, for his services in connection with the Fleet during the late Egyptian Campaign.

Sir Thomas Brassey, M.P., has arrived at Malta in his yacht Sunbeam, and has since been engaged making an inspection of the dockyard. The Junior Lord of the Admiralty will return home viâ Madeira.

The appointment of five Captains and five Commanders, additional to the President, for study at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, is the first instalment of officers of that rank under the provisions of the recent regulation by which a limited number of each grade may be borne for full pay, and we trust that the Admiralty will see the advantage of enlarging the numbers, and thus give greater facilities for the seniors of the Naval service acquiring a knowledge of professional matters, which has become a necessity in this age of science.

Captain James A. Poland has been appointed Flag Captain to the Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, in the place of Captain John D'Arcy, whose precarious state of health has forced him to resign the appointment.

The Admiralty, having perpetrated a grave injustice in placing two officers over the head of Lieutenant Conway-Gordon, R.M.A., have determined to abide by their act. From inquiries made at Whitehall, we learn that at a recent meeting of the Board, it was resolved that the decision arrived at by their Lordships in this case shall be considered final. This is carrying injustice too far. Their Lordships have actually punished Lieutenant Conway-Gordon for passing the prescribed examination, and have rewarded two officers who failed to pass that examination by making them regimentally senior to Lieutenant Conway-Gordon. That officer has lost two steps in regimental seniority at the whim and caprice of the Admiralty, who deem this the correct manner to encourager les autres, we suppose.

Practical jokes, as perpetrated in the olden days, are no longer continued in the service. The rapid strides made by the community at large in civilisation, science, and education have shown the folly of that horseplay by which many a young officer has before now lost his life. We recently had occasion to announce that a court-martial had been ordered to assemble at Chatham, to try the ringleaders in a case of this kind, in which a subaltern of Marines had been somewhat unmercifully handled by his comrades, whose animosity he had, rightly or wrongly, incurred. The decision of the court-martial held on Monday, under the presidency of Colonel Thomas, at the Royal Marine Barracks, Chatham, on the three ringleaders, Lieutenants J. M. Lalor, F. N. R. Wilson, and Watson, for their unseemly conduct, was promulgated last Friday, before a full parade. The garrison court found all three guilty, and adjudged them to be each severely reprimanded, and their swords to be returned to them.

"Out of sight, out of mind," is an old saw, the truth of which has been rudely brought home to those serving on board the Sultan. The ship was away from home when the "Egyptian heroes" returned to their native land, and all on board, having done good service at the bombardment of Alexandria and elsewhere, looked forward to a warm reception when their turn came to set foot on their native soil again. But they have been disappointed. No more stir was made about them when they returned to Portsmouth than was made for any other ship of the Channel Squadron.

Since the departure of the Channel Squadron, Portsmouth Dockyard has resumed its normal aspect. The Warrior is the sole occupant of the harbour jetties, and the reconstruction of this part of the dockyard is extending northward. The sheer jetty is to be taken in hand shortly, and preparations are now being made for the temporary removal of the west sheers, overlooking the harbour. A couple of large iron cylinders will be sunk for the sheer legs to rest upon; but it is intended, according to present arrangements, to replace the same sheers, which appears unsatisfactory, as they are old-fashioned, and with their present fittings, remain always drooped at one angle, a decided disadvantage when masting ships. The ship basin has been pumped out for a general overhaul, and presents the unsightly and unsavoury spectacle usual under such circumstances. The Calliope, on No. 3 slip, makes visible progress, a considerable portion of the wood sheathing being already bolted on her bottom; but the moulds for the sponsons have apparently only been removed to make room for others; and it appears to be undecided as yet what form these will take. It has been found in the Canada that there is scarcely room enough on the revolving platform for the gun's crew to work, and it is proposed in the Calliope to substitute a fixed platform of increased dimensions, on which the gun and carriage will revolve; and also to arrange it so that the gun can be secured with its long muzzle pointing forward inside the netting, instead of outside, as in the other vessels,—a decided improvement. A contrivance has also been proposed by which efficient protection from small-arm fire may be afforded to the crews of the broadside guns, the muzzle projecting through a revolving cylindrical shield. The bow of the Camperdown begins to assume a more finished appearance, the massive stem becoming gradually an integral part of the vessel, as strake after strake of the plating is bolted to it; the side ribs of the spur are also fixed in their places, and the future position of the armoured deck where it slopes down to the ram can be plainly traced by the frames. The Colossus is at length afloat again in the large basin, and has been furbished up a little by the painters, and the Edinburgh is out on her trials. The Imperieuse has the whole of her wood sheathing on, and a good deal of the planking on her spar deck. Her rudder was also placed under the stern this week, ready for shipping. In the old steam basin are the Triumph, getting out her machinery, the Active, with her new topsides nearly completed, the Emerald, and Cordelia, the latter, with running-gear rove and one of her sponson guns mounted, looking nearly ready for the pendant. The Mercury, since her transfer to the first division of the steam reserve, has been painted white and touched up generally, but there is as yet no news about her being commissioned. The Hecla has come into harbour, and lies in the tidal basin.

The following officers commenced their torpedo course on board the Vernon on Monday last:—Acting Sub-Lieutenants J. H. E. Allen, M. H. Cooper, L. A. Tawney, W. G. Van Ingen, A. F. Holmes, E. G. W. Digby, and C. R. Keppel.

With reference to the provision contained in Fleet Circular No. 82, of June 25, 1881, that the active list of chief gunners and boatswains shall not exceed 24, exclusive of officers holding either rank in virtue of their appointments (chief and other gunners being eligible for such appointments, as well as chief and other boatswains), the Admiralty have decided to gradually increase the number of chief gunners under such arrangements as their Lordships may make, up to one, half of the total number of chief gunners and chief boatswains, inclusive of officers holding either rank in virtue of their appointments. The following alteration is to be made in the Queen's Regulations, 1879:—Article 272, p. 63, as altered by Fleet Circulars No. 82, dated June 28, 1881, and No. 32, dated July 25, 1882. After line 7 add, "Of the total number of chief gunners and chief boatswains, including officers holding either rank by virtue of their appointments, one-half will be composed of chief gunners."

The seamen of the German Fleet will, from October 1, be divided into two Divisions, with the two principal Naval stations for head-quarters. A Rear-Admiral or Post-Captain will be appointed to the post of Inspector of Naval Ordnance, and will have under his control the Naval Ordnance Department, the gunnery-ship, the Naval Ordnance, torpedo and mine depôts, and also the Naval Fire Brigade of each division.

The Admiralty have directed that the following clause is to be added to Article 1,417 of the Queen's Regulations, p. 448:—"Officers invalided from causes due to their own imprudence or misconduct, and requiring the attendance of a servant on passage, will be liable to defray the cost of such servant's passage, either wholly or in part as the Admiralty may determine, according to the circumstances of each particular case."

Vice-Admiral the Lord John Hay left the Piræus for Volo on September 17 with the Squadron, which will shortly be dispersed for the winter, the Commander-in-Chief returning to Malta.

In order to check desertion on the Australian station, the Admiralty have directed that a special force of ship's corporals be selected from the various guard-ships and sent to Australia, there to act as police and private detectives on shore in the ports frequented by her Majesty's ships on the station.

The German Naval Reserve of the Second-class, one hundred men, has been called out for its annual training, which this year will commence at Kiel on October 1 and end on October 21.

Rear-Admiral Sir Anthony H. Hoskins, K.C.B., has returned to the Admiralty from a tour of inspection of the Coastguard Stations and Reserves on the coast of Dorset and on the Isle of Sheppey.

Commissioned officers serving in the German Navy are entitled, annually, to six weeks' leave of absence, for pleasure; while officers contracting illness on service are allowed three months' leave of absence to recruit their health. The rules regulating leave of absence are drawn up in a far more liberal spirit than are those which obtain in our service.

The French have just launched the Indomptable at Lorient, a vessel somewhat resembling our Glatton type, and intended for coast-defence. Ordered in 1872, she was not commenced until 1877, and after being eight years on the stocks, she has at last been launched. Her dimensions are as follows:—Displacement, 7,184 tons; length at water-line, 279 ft. 10 in.; beam, 59 ft.; depth of hold, 24 ft. 7 in.; maximum thickness of armour, $19\frac{5}{8}$ in.; minimum ditto, 13 in.; draught of water, 28 ft. 6in.; her armament is composed of two 72-ton guns, with machine-guns. She is divided into a great number of water-tight compartments, has two screws, no sailing power, and her cuirass is two-thirds iron and one-third steel. The Indomptable belongs to the Tonnere type. The latter vessel was laid down in 1872, and sent to sea in 1877. The other ships of this type in the French Navy are the Fulminant, which was launched the other day at Cherbourg, the Furieux, Terrible, Caïman, and Requin.

We do not know to what service "Captain" Drevar, who went to sea in a tub last week, belongs, but, reading the account of his performance, we must object to the apparatus being called "a life-saving raft," unless for the "Horse Marines." If a man will go to sea in an 18-gallon cask, all we can say is he deserves what he gets.

The present aspect of affairs in the neighbourhood of Canton is much the same as it was in 1857, when the threats of the Chinese mob against foreigners culminated in the attack on the factories, which led to the three years' war which ensued between England and France against China. The causes, however, are different. In 1857, ill-feeling was first created by the seizure of the lorcha Arrow by the Chinese. when flying English colours, and the refusal of Yeh, the Governor of Canton, to restore her crew to liberty, the rabble in the lower parts of the city at the same time making common cause against the foreign community on the river-side, attacking and burning their dwellings and storehouses, and forcing the occupants to take refuge on board the few ships then in the river. On the present occasion, the aggression is laid at the hands of the foreigners themselves, who are accused of having caused the death of a Chinaman. But history repeats itself in the ensuing émeute, which, although not so serious as that of 1857, was yet sufficiently so to cause most of the foreign residents to flee to the ships for safety, and would most probably have ended as the previous affair, in the total destruction of the foreign settlement, had it not been checked in time by a few Europeans, aided at last by the Chinese soldiers. It is still a question, however, whether disturbances will end here, and whether not only France, but England also, may not be drawn into collision with the Chinese Empire. It is a strange fact, that in spite of the increased intercommunication which has existed between the Chinese and Europeans since the conclusion of the last war, there is still the same strong feeling of hatred to the foreign element, and when once the Chinese mind is excited against the "Fanqui," or "foreign devil," it matters not whether the cause of offence comes from English, French, Portuguese, or other nation, so long as it be European; vengeance is taken on all alike, as opportunity presents itself. It is useless to attempt to combat this peculiarity in the Celestial, and the only way to insure peace is to put on a bold front, and stand no attempt at bullying. Once cave in, and there is no further peace or safety until it is gained by open fight, and the aggressors brought to submission. It is to be hoped that the lessons previously learnt will not be forgotten, and that a strong hand will be used, in the event of any further rising against the foreign residents in the suburb of Canton.

A gentleman, who selects the nom de plume of "Bone-driver," writes to say:—"I see that it was reported in several papers that 'the colours of the Guards were decked with laurels, on the anniversary of Tel-el-Kebir; band played,' &c. This was not the case. The colours of the Guards were not 'decked with laurels,' nor was the 'anniversary' observed with the Brigade of Guards in any way." We hope "Bone-driver" is correct, and that the papers and reports were wrong.

We regret that, in consequence of the great demands on our space, we are unable to give particulars from time to time of the rifle meetings, &c., which are held in the various military districts. To some, no doubt, the omission of the names of the successful shots, is a disappointment; but it must be remembered that a service journal has other matters to give attention to, and after all, the particulars of rifle meetings, are not interesting to the general body of our readers. We should prefer, of course, to give much more matter than we do. The spirit, truly, is willing, but we have that formidable difficulty of space always before us, and it is one not easily overcome.

The manœuvres of the 4th Army Corps of the German Army have been taking place during this and the previous week at Merseburg, before the Emperor and a brilliant suite, and the official military representatives of foreign countries, and were brought to a close on Wednesday last, after the performance during the meeting of some sufficiently successful and instructive exercises. The scene of operations is now transferred to Homburg, where the 11th Army Corps is repeating the performance given by the 4th Army Corps, but before a much more distinguished assembly. There are at the present time gathered together at Homburg to witness the manœuvres two Kings, the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Connaught, the Duke of Cambridge, and a host of Royal and Imperial Highnesses, Grand Dukes, and Princes from all parts of Europe. The 11th Army Corps and Hessian Division marched past the Emperor yesterday. There were present besides the Emperor, the Crown Prince and Princess and family, the Kings of Spain, Saxony, and Roumania, the Prince of Wales in the uniform of the Blucher Hussars, and the Dukes of Edinburgh, Connaught, and Cambridge. The spectacle was, it is needless to say, a most brilliant one. There was an immense concourse of spectators and great enthusiasm. During the manœuvres of the 4th Army Corps at Merseberg there were a "march-past," a battle, with, on the one side, nearly the whole force of the Army Corps, consisting of about 18,000 men, and, on the other side, a "skeleton" enemy, and two battles in which the troops were divided into about equal parts, and the respective Commanders each fought for victory, relying on his own skill. Contrary to the custom in this country of having the "march-past" after the soldiers have done all the hard work, and are thoroughly fatigued and worn out, the Germans begin with the "march-past," while the men are fresh, and the uniforms and accoutrements are all spick and span. There is, however, a point of resemblance between the British and the German Armies which was noticed at Merseberg, and which is quite comforting, considering that our reformers are for ever taking the German Army as their ideal. We refer to the fact that squadrons of cavalry were put out of action by the umpires for making charges which in actual warfare could only have led to their total annihilation; and infantry regiments were firing point-blank at one another, at a distance of less than 50 yards. The Emperor was present on each day of the manœuvres, and at most of the evening fêtes, which were organised at great expense by the municipality of Merseberg. His Majesty, who is very proud of his Army, has expressed his approval of the efficiency and discipline of the 4th Army Corps, and has emphasized his approval by conferring on its commander, General Blumenthal, the title of Count.

A Distinguished-Service Reward is vacant by the appointment of Lieutenant-General R. Knox to the colonelcy of the 20th Hussars. General Knox commanded the 18th Hussars for many years.

The following conversation between two troop serjeant-majors was overheard a few days ago at a station not many miles from London. Serjeant-major of Hussar regiment: "What sort of officer is Captain ——?" Serjeant-Major of Dragoons: "Oh, a splendid fellow all round; a thorough gentleman, too, beloved by everybody, and a soldier down to the ground!" Serjeant-Major of Hussars: "But he has not passed, I understand, and is not to get his step." Serjeant-Major of Dragoons: "No, he has not passed; but to my mind that proves his worth. Those who do pass are not, as a rule, up to much. They may be good at books, but they do not shine at much else." And there is, undoubtedly, a good deal of truth in what this old soldier said. Conducted as it is at present, the examination for promotion can be little test of military ability.

The Irish Establishment is short just now of one Surgeon-General and three Deputy-Surgeons-General. The reason of this is that changes are constantly taking place, owing to the advanced age at which Brigade-Surgeons reach the administrative ranks, and the rapid rate at which promotion goes on as a natural result. In view of this state of things, the Secretary of State for War might well ask himself whether, under the present terms of promotion and retirement, he is getting his full money's worth in the case of the Medical Department? Every officer borne on the strength of a Department and not doing duty is not only a dead-loss, but his retention on the List naturally affects other individuals to a greater or less extent. The whole service suffers, and we fail to see that there is any advantage which can be pointed to as a set-off. It may be remembered that the question was raised lately by the author of the pamphlet which we noticed at length in our issue of the 4th ult. The writer made out a very strong case in favour of a new Warrant. The condition of affairs in the senior grades seems to show convincingly the soundness of the ideas he put forward.

The idea of reducing the strength of the garrison of Halifax, Nova Scotia, from two to one battalion, which was spoken of some time ago, has been abandoned as inexpedient.

There is evidently dissension in the French Cabinet on the subject of Tonquin, some Ministers being anxious to push matters to extremities, and others alarmed lest France should be entangled in a costly war with China. The Liberal press is also divided on the subject of rejecting or accepting the Chinese proposals. One editor says:—"France desires to live in peace with all her neighbours, but China must know that a great country like ours cannot permit its statesmen to degrade it in the eyes of foreigners by accepting concessions which would resemble a capitulation." This being interpreted means that France, having forced the treaty of Hué down the Annamite throat, she must stand by that treaty, no matter what the injustice done to the Celestials. Dr. Harmand (we believe he was a horse-doctor), sent out as Civil Commissioner to Tonquin, appears to have taken the command of the expeditionary force out of the hands of General Bouet, and to have confided it to Admiral Courbet, an act of authority which seems to have highly incensed the military element in France. We see by a French paper that "the question of sending reinforcements to Tonquin has been settled. The troops demanded by General Bouet will leave Algeria on September 28, and will arrive at their destination at the end of November. Let us hope that, thanks to the energetic attitude assumed by the Commander-in-Chief of the expedition (General Bouet, since removed), that there will be no more culpable delay,"—culpable delay on the part of the War Minister, who refused to send out reinforcements when asked for, as that would have been, in his opinion, a violation of the Constitution. General Thibaudin consequently left Paris, thus throwing all the responsibility on the shoulders of his colleagues. This conduct is called by a Government journal "a clumsy ruse" and "an absurd comedy." Should the reinforcements arrive too late, the War Minister will certainly be answerable for any misfortune that may befal. The reinforcements about to be despatched to Tonquin consist of Algerian troops, and are not men drawn by conscription. It is hoped that this method of feeding the expedition will be popular in the country, and that men having served in Algeria will better be able to resist the climate of Tonquin. However, at the time of the Mexican Expedition, it was remarked that no troops suffered so severely from the climate as those drawn from the great French colony on the shores of the Mediterranean. When the reinforcements reach Tonquin, the French Commander will have at his disposal 7,000 soldiers, 1,000 sailors, and 2,000 native auxiliaries,—certainly not too large a force for the work required. A writer in the Figaro gives a very gloomy picture of the expeditionary corps, adding that, "in its present critical situation, to deprive it of its real chief is one of those felonies which make a stain in history."

Sir Patrick M'Dougall, in the Contemporary Review, is very wrathful with regard to that class termed by him the "grievance-monger." But surely the grievance-monger has his uses. It is the duty of those in office to represent everything in the brightest light. But for the grievance-monger—the man who not only knows that the shoe pinches, but says so—the public would go on from year to year congratulating itself on possessing what it might not have, an efficient army. It is the grievance-monger who shows where the defects in a system are to be found; it is the grievance-monger who ventilates grievances, and enables those in authority to redress them. In the eyes of officials, the grievance-monger,—or rather, the judicious critic,—may be, and doubtless is, an intolerable nuisance. But, as a correspondent of the Morning Post says, with much truth, if there were no grievances, there would be no grievance-mongers. The remedy for the evil, if such it must be considered, is therefore at hand, if the responsible authorities wish to stamp it out. Let them do away with all real grievances, and then, but not till then, will the grievance-monger disappear. Sir Patrick M'Dougall does not say that there have been no grievances; in fact, he has acknowledged, in his Nineteenth-Century article this month, that there have been. He has been very happy in his professional career. Perhaps if Dame Fortune had not smiled kindly on him, he would have taken a different view.

Musketry practice and "military training" are being pushed forward with rapidity during the present fine weather at Aldershot. In connection with the latter training, much night outpost duty is being practised. It has been ordered during the week that instruction in field cooking shall, in future, form part of the last fortnight's course of military training, viz.:—First day—Constructing and cooking on sunken flying-column trenches with the service camp kettles; rations, salt pork and biscuit. Second day—Constructing and cooking on the wall trench and on marshy ground, with the service camp kettles; rations, preserved meat and vegetables. Third day—Cooking without trenches, each man in his mess tin, salt meat and biscuit. Fourth day—Independent cooking in mess tins; rations, fresh meat and vegetables.

At the recent examination in tactics for officers of the Auxiliary Forces, forty-seven Volunteer officers succeeded in passing the ordeal to the satisfaction of the examiners. The Militia service was represented by one solitary officer, Major W. H. Allsopp, 3rd Battalion, Worcestershire Regiment. Can it be that Militia officers consider themselves "above this sort of thing?" We are fully aware of the difficulties under which they labour in being obliged to present themselves for examination in their own districts; but even this rule is scarcely sufficient to account for the very discreditable show made by them on the last occasion. If this goes on, the War Office will be compelled to take serious notice of the matter, for it cannot stand quietly by and see a junior service going to the front, whilst the members of a senior service show no inclination to fit themselves for the more responsible duties devolving upon them. Strange to say, only one officer got this time special mention, Major H. L. Florence, 22nd Middlesex Rifle Volunteer Corps.

"A True Wolseleyite," whatever that may mean, wrote a letter to the Morning Post last Saturday which, if intended to be serious, was a very melancholy production, and if intended to be taken seriously was a joke, indeed. A correspondent who had expressed his apprehension that the Army was not what it ought to be in a letter to our contemporary, is addressed by the "True Wolseleyite" in a manner which leads us to think the gentleman wrote in the mess ante-room rather late at night. "No grievance-monger" is asked to calm his feelings because, says "A True Wolseleyite," "my company marched into camp on the 11th inst. three officers, five serjeants, and 93 rank and file, all of us as fine men as you could wish to see" (?) (the italics are our own), "and grateful to Lord Wolseley for the abolition of the musketry-instructor!" Argal. Because our "True Wolseleyite" is as fine a man as you could wish to see, and is grateful for the abolition of musketry-instructor, and his company of three officers, five serjeants, and 93 rank and file, each and all as fine men as you could wish to see and equally grateful, marched into camp somewhere on the 11th, Sir P. M'Dougall is a panic-monger, and the British Army is perfection. "Write me down an ass!"

Sneering remarks are often made about Volunteers when they are seen smoking in the streets in uniform. In this matter there is the widest diversity between corps; for while in some, it would seem as if they did not think their uniform complete without pipes in their mouths, in others (and these the best representatives of the force), smoking in the streets is absolutely unknown). Can we expect all Volunteers to think this practice slovenly and unsoldierly, and consequently to discontinue it, when many of those whom they look on as patterns in all the details of military bearing set them a bad example? They may see any day, and especially on Sundays, men of the Foot Guards smoking, as they walk along streets in which it is almost certain that they will not encounter any of their own officers. Such irregularities cannot be effectively checked by orders alone. When smoking in uniform in the public streets comes to be considered by all ranks a low habit, it will be discontinued, but not till then.

An elaborate Return showing the strength of regiments and the numbers in each who have attained the different standards of education accompanies the General Orders dated September 1. In this Return, there is a column for the names of the Schoolmasters; and in this, in cases where there is no Schoolmaster, the word "nil" appears. The compiler of the Return evidently does not know that "nil" is the Latin for "nothing," but not for "none." We would recommend him to use the English word "none" in such cases in future.

The detailed report of the experimental field-firing now being carried on at Aldershot can hardly fail to be both interesting and instructive. Yet its statements will have to be carefully weighed, and several modifying causes taken into account. The per-centage of hits will not be nearly as high as it would be if the men had previously attained a fair standard of shooting at known distances; because, to the element of uncertainty due to miscalculation of distance, must be added the acknowledged inability of a large proportion of our young soldiers to make moderately good practice at measured ranges. If field-firing should take place repeatedly on the same, or nearly the same ground, the distances will soon cease to be unknown, for men who have shot will give the benefit of their experience to men who are to shoot. Nay, more, some will endeavour to ascertain the distances between conspicuous objects by pacing, and possibly by other means. We hope that some practice will be made at dummies clad in uniforms of different colours, from which we might learn something of the relative facilities of seeing and hitting men dressed in the so-called invisible colours, and men with scarlet tunics, umber belts, and helmets with covers of some neutral tint not unlike the colour of the back-ground. This would be a more practical test than gazing at huge, square targets covered with cloth of various colours, and utterly unlike any objects our soldiers will ever be required to fire at.

The Morning News, published in Paris, contains a report on the French manœuvres which it attributes to Major de Gossler, Aide-de-Camp to Field-Marshal Von Moltke. The Major's report may be thus summarised:—"The cavalry manœuvres this year have a special interest, as they are probably the last which will be directed by the General de Galliffet. The divisions of cavalry were commanded by Generals Charreyon, d'Espenilles, de Gressot, Lardeur, and Comte Friant. The division of General Ladeur showed itself vastly superior to the others; it was composed of four regiments and two batteries, and all its dispositions were in accordance with the requirements of modern tactics. The officers and soldiers showed themselves excellent horsemen. All their movements were executed without any useless precipitation and with remarkable regularity, But it is necessary to point out the reverse of the medal. As soon as it was a question of unforeseen initiative, even against an imaginary enemy, the Brigadiers, the Colonels, and even the Generals of Division displayed a very regrettable amount of hesitation and incapacity. The Marquis de Galliffet was the first to blame these serious defects. On several occasions he took command of divisions personally, and his indications were always clear and logical, and his explanations perfectly intelligible." The Major adds that the position held by the Marquis de Galliffet has been greatly damaged by the part which politics play in all French affairs, and that he will probably soon disappear from the military horizon of the Republic. He sees much to praise in the French Cavalry, but is of opinion that things cannot go on over well, "for it is a General of Infantry, who, although brave and useful in his sphere, is completely ignorant of cavalry matters, who holds the post of Inspector of the Cavalry Division of the Military School of St. Cyr." The Major finds fault, too, with the superfluous number of Generals and Colonels, whose state of health would not allow them to go through a campaign of a week,—"four Generals and several Colonels were obliged to leave the manœuvres owing to bad health." The Major concludes by saying that the French military papers are not likely to point out any defects, as they are all in the hands of the Minister of War, who spends £12,000, in subsidising them.

Baker Pasha, Colonel Baker, and a number of officers of the Egyptian Forces, arrived in London on Friday week, and went on visits to their families and friends on short leave.

Many objections, some reasonable, others only plausible, are continually urged against the present system of competitive examinations for commissions in the Army. We are told that the trial is needlessly severe; that many young men break down utterly under the strain of preparation, and are consequently rendered unfit for other occupations; that the mental vigour of some of the successful competitors even is seriously and permanently impaired, and their efficiency as officers lessened; that physical advantages are not taken into account; that the knowledge of some of the subjects of the examinations is useless afterwards; and, lastly, that the vast majority are doomed to bitter disappointment. The obvious replies to most of these objections are that the numbers who pass this dreaded ordeal creditably, if not "with honours," are always in excess of the number of vacancies; that those who break down during preparation prove that they are deficient in stamina and unfit for hard work; that the cases of impaired mental vigour are very rare, and not always attributable to excessive study; and that the candidates all knew the number of vacancies absolutely, and the number of competitors approximately. While fully admitting the great advantages of a system which closes the doors of admission to the commissioned ranks against fools and dunces, we would venture to suggest that the way to very decided improvement in two directions seems plain. By raising the physical standard, or even by enforcing it more rigidly than now, the number of candidates would be advantageously lessened. The standard of height is now so very low that it would not be unreasonable to enact that, after a certain date, no candidate should be qualified to compete who did not fulfil the very moderate requirements for an infantry recruit, and that no cadet should be appointed to any regiment who was not of the standard height of that regiment, or very near it. The difficulties in the way of giving marks for proficiency in athletic exercises have been pronounced nearly insuperable, though the speed at which a man can walk or run, and the height or distance he can jump, can be measured more easily and accurately than the results of study. At no distant time these difficulties may be overcome, and a high qualifying standard of bodily strength, activity, and endurance established, even if the trials be not competitive. The other suggestion is that, instead of the study of Spenser's "Faerie Queene" and of the utterly obsolete diction of Chaucer, other subjects for examination should be selected, the knowledge of which would be likely to be useful to officers during their military career. As the supreme test of knowledge, or rather ingenuity, each competitor might be asked to describe the benefits which the Army has actually derived from the late reforms, and especially from the demolition of the traditions and identity of, probably, the most famous regiments the world has ever seen!

If the Earl of Airlie had been a feather-bed soldier, he would not have gone back to India to join his regiment after he succeeded to the title, and in that case Cortachy (or Cortachié) Castle, the fine old seat on the Esk, would in all probability have been in his own hands, and would have thus escaped destruction.

We cannot say there is much to be proud of in the shooting of our Volunteers at the Brussels Tir National. To be 9th, 11th, 21st, and 45th in the list of prize-winners is not any great thing. In one pool a Volunteer won the 44th prize, with a score of 23 out of a possible 25. We cannot understand exactly what the 43 gentlemen before him did. Those who were 88th, 89th, &c., must have been ordinary shots, or have had very good men against them. Private Lowe, Queen's Westminster, however, did well all round, and scored highly at the first meeting near Amsterdam. "Cæteri desunt."

We see that France is well represented at the grand manœuvres of the German Army, which five officers have been told off to follow:—General Baron de Launay, who commands the 3rd Division of Infantry; Colonel Loban, of the 2nd Cuirassiers; Captain Orbion, of the Artillery, attached to the Staff of the Minister of War; and the two Military Attachés on permanent service at Berlin.

It appears that some of the French battalions now in Tunis are about to return home, and that the corps of occupation will be maintained at 18,000 men. The probability is that during the next session the French Chambers will order the creation of a colonial army. The Marine Infantry, which is only 20,000 strong at the maximum, cannot suffice for the new colonial system, and the military authorities are anxious to avoid disorganising battalions at home in order to furnish troops for service beyond the sea.

Reviews.

The Scientific Angler. By the late David Foster. (Bemrose and Sons.)

The second edition of the late Mr. Foster's book on artistic angling has appeared at an opportune time. Salmon-fishing has just concluded in some rivers after a season of extraordinary success, but there remains a great deal of water still open to the angler. The Fishery Commissioners some years ago made sad mistakes, by closing certain rivers prematurely; but no doubt they have learned their work better, and found out that what suits one river is mischievous in another. The Scientific Angler is supposed to represent a general and artistic work on that subject. To do so successfully requires a great deal of patient study, a strong, natural love for the sport, and what may be called a morbid longing to become acquainted, as far as possible, with the habits and haunts of fish. It is perfectly clear that these attributes belonged to Mr. Foster in a considerable degree, or he could not have left behind him records which go so particularly into the different phases of the lives of fish. There are a few chapters which will not afford pleasure to many readers,—those on worm-fishing for trout, and bait fishing in general. The former is described artistically; but in mentioning the "lures for trout," we are glad to say no notice is taken of what many poachers have found terribly destructive,—salmon roe, the use of which is contrary to law. It is refreshing to turn from bait and ground-fishing to the salmon or trout and the artistic fly, and here Mr. Foster is evidently in his element, and gives his readers some chapters of most agreeable matter.

SIR,—I shall feel obliged if you will favour me with your opinion of the following rule. According to the present system, the senior major of an infantry regiment has command of a company, but being a mounted officer he does not command his company on parade, unless specially ordered to do so, at inspections, or under exceptional circumstances, when he is liable to be ordered to dismount pro tem., and take command.* Now, it seems to me that this is an anomalous state of affairs that requires rectifying, and I appeal to you, therefore, to give the matter publicity in your columns. An officer in command of a company should, in my opinion, command the company on parade as well as off, and if he holds the appointment of mounted officer, which prevents him from fulfilling those duties in toto, he should not have command of a company at all. The dress of a mounted officer is not adapted to the work of a company officer, neither is it dignified for an officer in his position to be liable to be ordered to dismount on parade and take command of a company.

EHEU! TEMPORA MUTANTUR.

* If he be, he must obey. There are more anomalies than that in the situation.—ED. A. & N. G.

The Duke of Cambridge, who has been on a visit to the King and Queen of Denmark at Fredensborg Palace, near Copenhagen, since the 6th inst., has returned to Homburg, for the manœuvres of the German Army.

"OUR BOYS."

SIR,—After a careful perusal of all the correspondence in the papers on the subject of "Our Boys," what to do with them, and how to start them in life, I have come to the conclusion that isolated efforts to start them in life in the Colonies, without capital or technical education, must lead in most cases to failure. For the officers of the Army and Navy who have sons and daughters to put out in the world, it appears to me that what is required is united action and sufficient capital. This can only be obtained on the Co-operative system, which has proved so great a success in other directions. I would suggest that if sufficient capital could be obtained, military and naval colonisation should be started in Tasmania, Australia, New Zealand, and Canada, on lands purchased by a Military and Naval Co-operative Company, on farms not too large at first, but susceptible of enlargement. The company should place a local agent, capable of assisting, advising, and instructing officers and their children in colonial farming and work of all kinds, in selected places in each colony. It would also be most advisable to insist on boys and young men being instructed in this country, previous to emigration, in one or two of the following subjects:—Land surveying, colonial or rough engineering (which covers many essential matters), book-keeping, gardening, building, erection of wooden and zinc houses, the working arts of a carpenter, farrier, mason, brickmaker, &c. Special knowledge in one or more of the above subjects would enable young men to earn their livings in a new country, and would make them handy, useful, and self-reliant. The present school instruction of the sons of the middle-classes disqualifies young men from doing anything but follow a few professions, which are now quite choked up. A centre of advice and instruction in each colony, on which the families and sons of officers could rely, would be most valuable. I should advise also that the wives and daughters of Naval and Military emigrants should qualify themselves in household duties, so as to be able to conduct their establishments with the assistance of their own children and without servants. The daughters should be instructed in useful arts and knowledge before emigration. A large Military and Naval Co-operative Emigration Society would have great advantages in many ways (from its powerful machinery), both in the Coloniesand in London, and, successfully conducted, would confer vast advantages on the services. What is required is capital, good management, and support. If this proposal be considered a good and feasible one, and I receive a sufficient number of encouraging letters in reply, I will proceed at once, with the assistance of others, to get out a prospectus, obtain influential patronage, and endeavour to form a "Colonial, Naval, and Military Emigration Society." I would suggest that the Society lands should be a close borough, and conducted much on the lines of the Close Brothers Company in Iowa, an English colony started by the Messrs. Close, Cambridge men, in 1876. In five years they controlled 200,000 acres, and the colony numbered 300 persons. For particulars of this enterprise, see Harper's Magazine, April, 1881, under the heading, "Young Man, go West," by Poultney Bigelow. It is suggested that for the success of this scheme of organised emigration, the Committee of Management should have the selection of candidates, with a view of the required qualifications being tested as to their fitness for emigration.—I am, &c.,

EDWARD WILLIAM BRAY, M.G.

COASTGUARD CARPENTERS.

The Coastguard carpenters are complaining, a correspondent informs us, at being appointed to the force on shore, instead of being kept afloat, and thus given the chance of rising in the service. Divisional carpenters in the Coastguard are appointed to the force on shore, for the purpose of repairing boats and other work connected with the service, but are, asserts our correspondent, employed from one week's end to another on private work, although by rights they should perform the same duty as the other men of the Coastguard when not employed at their trade. He then continues:—"I think if their Lordships were to dispense with divisional carpenters in the Coastguard, they would find their services more beneficial on board ship, and we should have a chance of getting to a higher grade in the service, which we will not get in the Coastguard. They would also save a great deal in having the boats repaired locally, which would only be a trifle, as, taking each division on an average, I would suppose there is not more than one boat a year to repair in each."

The Lahore paper states that "a private telegram has been received in India, stating as a positive fact that Staff Corps subalterns are in future to get their captaincies in ten years."

The Ready is being brought forward for commission at Sheerness, as is also the Caroline, launched last November.

A lieutenant's naval pension of £50 a year has fallen vacant by the death of Retired Com. W. C. Nowell, on Saturday, at Oxford, aged 83. He was the eldest son of the late Vice-Admiral W. Nowell, of Iffley, near Oxford, and entered the Navy in February, 1813, receiving his commission as lieutenant in August, 1828. He served for many years in the West Indies and the Mediterranean, and in 1847 was appointed to the command of the Ardent, steam sloop. In October, 1860, he was advanced to the rank of commander on the Retired List, and in February, 1863, was awarded a Greenwich Hospital pension.

The Sphinx will shortly be commissioned at Sheerness for service in the Persian Gulf. She is a new vessel, having been built for the Admiralty by Messrs. Green, of Blackwall.

Instructions were on Tuesday evening issued by the Admiralty for the Champion, Daring, Flying Fish, and Kestrel, on service on the China station, and which have been ordered home to be paid off, to be recommissioned at Hong Kong. The new crews will be taken out in the troopship Orontes, and will embark at Portsmouth about Oct. 1.

EGYPTIAN NOTES.

Cairo, September 10, 1883.

It will be seen, then, that there is a very marked improvement in the health of all but the Ramleh and Alexandria garrisons. The Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry still remains the black-sheep, and when we consider that out of the over £25,000 a year which Egypt has to pay for troops in hospital, one-fourth is due to this regiment alone, its retention in Egypt becomes a scandal.

It would be interesting, by the way, to know whether a medical officer reported strongly against the use of the Ramleh barracks before they were occupied, and who is responsible for the disregard of this advice.

There has only been one death during the week, and that at Alexandria, but there have been 115 fresh admissions into hospital, of which 31 are at Alexandria and Ramleh.

The under-mentioned officers have passed the required examination in subjects (c) and (d) for the ranks stated against their names :—Major Smith, 19th Hussars, Captain Eden, Royal Highlanders, Captain and Brevet Major Wood, Royal Engineers, Captain Wauchope, C.M.G., Royal Highlanders, Captain and Brevet Major Sandwith, R.M. (D.A.A.G.), Captains Archer and Anderson, King's Royal Rifle Corps, and Captain and Brevet Major Flood, 19th Hussars, for Major; Lieutenants St. Aubyn, Grenadier Guards (A.D.C.), Buchanan Riddell, King's Royal Rifles, and Payne, Gordon Highlanders, for Captain. The following officers have passed in subjects (a) and (b), sec. 4, par. 37, Q.R. :—Captain N. Brophy, Royal Highlanders; Lieutenants H. G. Marsh, T. C. A. Walker, W. S. Stanhope, and R. W. Nicholson, 19th Hussars.

The services of Lieutenant Huleatt, R.E., have been placed at the disposal of Sir E. Wood, V.C., G.C.M.G., K.C.B., for employment with the Egyptian Army from the 1st inst.

INTERPRETERS.

"In these days of education," writes "A Private, R.M.L.I.," "surely a private may be allowed to gain the same advantages as an officer. I applied to be allowed to pass for an interpretership, and was told that only officers were entitled to the privilege. Although only a private in the Marines, I am a linguist, and have a good knowledge of French, Italian, and Hindustani. Why, therefore, should the fact of my being 'only a private' stand in the way of my 'knowledge' advancing me in life? You have recently published a letter from a correspondent signing himself 'R.N.,' dealing with the question of the foreign languages studied by officers of the Navy, and have also advocated the employment of Seamen and Marines, having a knowledge of foreign languages, on the staff of the ship, as orderly-room clerks, so as to utilise that knowledge in foreign parts. No doubt their linguistic attainments would then stand the service in good stead. But the Admiralty have so far set their faces against everything of the kind, and 'A Private, R.M.L.I.' or an 'A.B.' stands no chance of rising in his profession, however high the educational standard he has reached may be. Is this fair?" So far, we certainly consider the argument of our correspondent forcible, and believe the service would benefit greatly by the judicious selection of educated men to fill responsible posts. But a sentence in the letter from which we quote clearly shows the "cloven hoof," and forces us to pause and ponder whether, after all, the Admiralty are not wise in their generation in declining to accept the services tendered to them. That sentence runs as follows :—"Let Democracy be the order of the day, and the Navy will have an excess of talent that was never dreamt of before." To our mind, that sentence clearly proves that the writer, who, on his own showing, should be in a very different station in life to the one in which he is now, is a man who has fallen from his original social position, and been forced to enlist. Force majeure may be pleaded, we grant. The fault of his not having succeeded in life may not have been his. But it has apparently soured his disposition. It has made him look to "the spread of Democracy" as the panacea for all evils. But what is "Democracy"? The Destroyer of Discipline! The Democrat chafes under the slightest control, and is uncontrollable. We therefore consider our Democratic Marine most unfitted for the service of his adoption.

Lieutenant-General Sir Frederick FitzWygram, Bart., commanding the Division, has ordered that minor operations shall be carried out during the month, when practicable. Yesterday a combined minor operation took place, under the following general idea :—A force of all arms detached from an entrenched camp at Bagshot, to watch the points of passage across the Basingstoke Canal, is warned that a force from the direction of Guildford is moving towards it. The only possible points of passage are Frimley Lock Bridge and the Curzon Bridge. Lieutenant-Colonel Blackwell, Royal Artillery, commanded the Northern force; and Colonel Luck, C.B., 15th Hussars, the Southern force. Umpire-in-chief, Major-General Walker, V.C., C.B. About 100 cavalry, 350 infantry, and one field battery were engaged on either side.

The Empress Eugénie and suite visited the South Camp on Tuesday last, accompanied by General Sir Lintorn Simmons, G.C.B., Royal Engineers, who is at present on a visit at Aldershot. The visitors were received by Lieutenant-Colonel Jones and other officers of the Royal Engineers, and conducted through the lines of the corps, visiting the officers' and serjeants' messes, recreation-room, library, and married and single quarters. The Empress appeared to be much interested in what she saw.. Since her recent return to Farnborough, the Empress has taken more than ordinary interest in camp affairs. Last week, on the departure of the 87th Royal Irish Fusiliers for India, she was present at the station in her carriage to see them off, and on being recognised by the men, was lustily cheered.

A court of inquiry has recently been held as to the cause of the injuries sustained by Gunner Marshall, R.A., at a field-day about a month ago. It may be remembered that this man was injured by the premature explosion of a charge while he was using the rammer. No blame whatever is attributable to Gunner Marshall, who will probably be unfit for further service. Several of his fingers have been amputated, and his sight and right forearm have been permanently injured.

Lieutenant-Colonels Maunsell and Otter, Commandants of Military Schools in the Dominion of Canada, have joined the special class of garrison instruction under Major Harvey.

Major Miles, garrison instructor, has been appointed Permanent Secretary to the War-Game Revision Committee (of which Major-General Willes, C.B., is president), vice Major James, Scots Greys. This Committee will probably again be heard of after the grouse season.

Examinations for certificates of education will be held at the Camp during the whole of the ensuing week, when upwards of 800 non-commissioned officers and men from all the regiments and corps in garrison will be examined for 1st, 2nd, 3rd, or 4th-class certificates. Truly, there has been a run on examinations lately among all ranks about everything.

The Annual Athletic Sports of the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers were held on Thursday.

A very successful officers' assembly and dance was held at the Club House on Wednesday evening.

Lieutenant M. J. E. Fenwicke, 86th Royal Irish Rifles, recently transferred from the 39th Regiment, will shortly proceed to join his battalion in Bermuda.

There will be a combined minor operation on Tuesday next, the idea being the conduct of a provision convoy, by water, through an enemy's country.

Lieutenant A. B. Helyar, R.A., having been examined for promotion in subjects (a) and (b), sec. 4, par. 37, Queen's Regulations, has been found qualified.

The necessary alterations having been made in the targets, practice has recommenced at the moving and vanishing figures. The Cavalry will practice field-firing probably next week.

Captain J. A. Skene-Thomson, 100th Regiment, has also joined the Veterinary Class.

Time being epigrammatically defined as money, yard officials have had just ground for complaint by reason of the endless documents that they are compelled to sign. The attaching of the signature was almost necessarily a perfunctory duty, or rather a mechanical operation in the vast majority of cases, and, with the view of meeting a work which uselessly wasted time, a correspondence on the subject has taken place between the Admiralty and the Admiral-Superintendents of the different yards. The result is far from unsatisfactory. Their Lordships have so far recognised the uselessness, as a rule, of this wearisome process of initialling, that they have consented to a stamp being used where signing would be a purely formal task. The advantage of this concession may be inferred when it is stated that the documents daily passing through the Chief Constructor's office, for instance, range from 500 to over 800. Of course, in the case of payments, or where the proposals involve a discretionary power, the signature will continue to be personally affixed.—Portsmouth Times.

Lieut. H. W. Onslow left Malta on Sept. 8 in the P. and O. steamer Kaiser-i-Hind, to take up his appointment on board the Champion on the China station.

THE ARMY AND THE RESERVE.

SIR,—Drafts of upwards of 1,000 men in each of two Indian troopships being under orders to embark for India next month, to be followed by further departures during the winter months, lead to the consideration of what must be the condition of the home battalions after the dispatch of these drafts. A sudden necessity to place all the home battalions on a war strength would entail recalling to the ranks nearly, if not every man of our Army Reserve, leaving only the Militia Reserve to represent the so-called Reserve, for attainment of which we have sacrificed our former regimental system. It is not, however, my object to hark back on what is done, but to seek how to reconcile in the future our means to our requirements. These may be shortly stated to be a body of men, not under 24, in battalions serving in what I shall term our Eastern possessions, viz., Africa, India, China, and stations east of the Cape; and a reserve at home, drawn from our battalions at home, in the Mediterranean, West Indies, Nova Scotia, and Bermuda. To achieve these results, long service, with pension, must be granted to soldiers serving in the Eastern possessions, and short service continued in the battalions at home, Mediterranean, &c. To carry out these two systems, I propose the present term of enlistment, viz., seven years' Army service, and five with the Reserve, to continue, with authority for transfer to the Reserve after three years' Army service, when deemed advisable by the Secretary of State for War. Re-engagements to complete 12 years' Army service to cease, except in the case of serjeants and corporals. All serjeants and corporals to retain their present privilege of re-engagement to complete 12 years, also 21 years' Army service with pension, and the right of transfer to the home battalion after 10 years' continuous service abroad. Unmarried lance-corporals and privates, with one or more good-conduct badges, serving in the home battalion of regiments having the other battalion in the Eastern possessions, to be permitted, with the approval of the commanding officer, to re-engage during the last year of their seven years' Army engagement, so as to complete 21 years' Army service with pension in such numbers as will meet the requirements of the battalion abroad, and with the condition they proceed to join it with the next draft. Men so re-engaging to receive deferred pay to the date of re-engagement and a furlough; also to have a right to modified life pension, if invalided after 14 years' Army service, or previous to 21 years, and to a donation equivalent to 2d. a day for the period intervening between their re-engagement and being invalided, when under 14 years' Army service. The privilege of re-engaging as above to be extended to the battalion serving abroad. Men transferred to the Reserve at the end of seven years' Army service, unmarried and of good character, to be allowed, within one year of their transfer, to re-engage on same conditions as above, to complete 21 years' Army service (viz., 14 years), either with their original regiments, or into some other one having a battalion serving in the Eastern possessions, or about to proceed there. In the event of the battalion abroad being relieved by the home battalion, re-engaged men to be transferred or to volunteer to another battalion in the East, if their battalion is not relieved. To obviate the home battalions exceeding their establishment for a lengthened period, the re-engagement of Reserve men in proportion to the requirements of battalions abroad should not take place previous to Aug. 1 in each year, such re-engaged men continuing in excess of the home establishment pending embarkation. To enable commanding officers to decide on the re-engagement of Reserve men, the words "Re-engagement recommended" to be added to the present parchment certificate on transfer to the Reserve, when justified by the man's character and soldierly qualities. Company defaulter-sheets to be destroyed on re-engagement, or transfer to the Reserve, but the regimental sheet to be retained for one year, and to be forwarded on application from the battalion into which a re-engagement takes place. By this means, in place of weakening the home battalions annually, as is now the case, and sending immature men to our Eastern possessions, the battalions there serving would be replenished by men not under 24; also by giving the power of returning to military service to men who, after transfer to the Reserve, find no openings in civil life, the country will avoid the danger, not unworthy to be considered, of a number of discharged soldiers unable to find employment, discontented with their lot, and attributing their failure to the years passed in the Army. The battalions at home, Mediterranean, &c., would thus be better able to maintain a Reserve, consequent on the removal of the drain of young soldiers to furnish drafts to our Eastern possessions, and the cessation of re-engagements to complete 12 years' service in the ranks, except in the case of serjeants and corporals. As regards the financial aspect of my proposal, and the cost to the country of pensions, it must not be forgotten that expenditure would be diminished through striking off deferred pay now given on re-engagements to complete 12 years' army service, and in the reduced numbers required to proceed annually as drafts to our Eastern possessions and to return home. In what has been written, I have mainly considered Infantry of the Line, but by a somewhat similar system, long service, with pension, could be made applicable to Artillery, Engineers, and Cavalry in the Eastern possessions. There remain the Cavalry regiments and Guards battalions that do not proceed on ordinary foreign service. To these, long service with pension might be granted, to the extent of 100 men in each cavalry regiment and 200 in each battalion of Guards, exclusive of serjeants and corporals.—I am, &c.,

A GENERAL OFFICER.

The Admiralty have ordered one of the 64-pounder guns which are intended for the armament of merchant steamers in the event of international difficulties arising, to be experimentally fitted on board the torpedo depôt ship Hecla, which was originally built for mercantile service, for the purpose of determining whether any modifications in the fittings of that weapon may be considered necessary.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The Secretary of State for War has decided that the gratuity of £2 mentioned in Clause 111, Army Circulars of 1883, shall be paid to every non-commissioned officer and man of the Royal Artillery who fulfils the conditions and extends his service, whether he is about to embark for India or not.

To enable officers of the Royal Artillery who have been, or are likely to be, transferred or promoted from the mounted branches of the regiment to garrison batteries to become thoroughly acquainted with the practical working of heavy guns, the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has directed that short courses of instruction be formed at the School of Gunnery, Shoeburyness, for this purpose. Officers of all branches—horse, field, and garrison—below the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel will be required to pass these courses, the first of which commenced on Monday, the 17th inst., and is composed of officers who have recently been transferred or promoted to garrison batteries from the mounted branches. Officers who have hitherto served in the Horse or Field Artillery have had no opportunities of becoming acquainted with the drill of heavy guns, their time being fully engaged in their mounted duties, and in nearly all cases they have been quartered at stations where no heavy ordnance is available. When posted to garrison batteries, the duties of such officers in garrison are of such a nature as to admit of very little time being available for them to become conversant with their new and somewhat complicated drills.

H.M.S. Serapis sailed from Portsmouth on Sunday last for India, calling at Queenstown to complete her list of passengers. She embarked at Portsmouth on the previous day the 2nd and 3rd Batteries, 1st Brig., Scottish Division, Royal Artillery, comprising Capts. Walker and Gubbins, and Major Price, Capt. Richards, and Lieuts. Anderson and Hobbyn, and 67 men. They will be stationed at the Murree Hills and Fort William. Lieuts. Williamson, Dodgson, Barkley, and Flood also embarked at Portsmouth. At Queenstown, E Baty. 1st Brig. embarked, en route to Kirkee, consisting of Major M'Causland, Capt. Western, Lieuts. Tisdall, Carroll, and Johnson, and 87 men; and drafts of Artillery, consisting of Major Knox, Capt. Hansard, Lieuts. Ford, Galbraith, Thorpe, Gordon, Kaye, and Butcher, and 174 men.

Phillpotts, of Hazelmere, Torquay, entered the Army Oct. 1, 1857; became capt., March 24, 1871; and major, Jan. 2, 1878. He served in the expedition to China in 1860, and was present at Sinho, Tangku, capture of the Taku Forts, actions near Tang Chow, and surrender of Pekin (medal with two clasps).

15th East Yorkshire Regiment. Lieut. Houghton, 2nd Batn., sailed for India on Sunday in H.M.S. Serapis.

18th Royal Irish. On Wednesday, at Aldershot, Lieut.-Col. Dawson, 2nd Batn., presented a valuable silver cup to his serjeants, on behalf of the British residents in Alexandria, who forwarded the testimonial through Mr. Cookson, the British Consul, in recognition of the exemplary conduct of the battalion while protecting life and property in Alexandria, and of its conspicuous gallantry during its operations against Arabi Pasha, and especially at the storming of the lines of Tel-el-Kebir. At 3.45 p.m., the whole of the serjeants off duty assembled in their mess-house, Centre Infantry Barracks, under the presidency of Serjt.-Major Vecchio, and immediately afterwards Col. Dawson and Lieut. and Adjt. Simmonds entered the mess. The colonel at once addressed the serjeants to the effect that a very pleasing duty had devolved upon him—to present them with a silver goblet, the gift of the British residents of Alexandria, in appreciation of the services of the battalion in Egypt. The cup was then filled with pure "Kinahan," and the colonel had the first sup out of it; his example was followed by the adjutant and the serjeants. Serjt.-Major Vecchio responded in suitable terms on behalf of the serjeants. The serjeants then gave three cheers for the colonel, three cheers for their "plucky little adjutant," and three cheers for Mr. Cookson and the rest of the British residents of Alexandria. The cup is 21 in. high, and 8 in. in diameter at the mouth. It is set-off with wreaths of laurels and shamrocks, sphinxes, and the crest of the regiment, viz., "Virtutis Namurcensis Praemium," a motto granted to it by King William III., for distinguished gallantry at the storming and capture of the citadel of Namur. Accompanying the souvenir of the Egyptian campaign is a letter from the residents of Alexandria, testifying to the important services rendered by the Royal Irish in Egypt. The cup bears the following inscription:—"Presented to the non-commissioned officers of the Royal Irish Regiment (18th), as a mark of appreciation of their gallant and exemplary conduct during the late campaign in Egypt."

19th Yorkshire Regiment. The annual athletic sports of the 2nd Batn. took place at the Curragh on Saturday. The committee consisted of Lieut.-Col. Handley, Major Bruce, Capt. Levin, Lieuts. Hennah and Boyce, Qrmr. Pettitt, with Serjt.-Major Fraser and Qrmr.-Serjt. Hatton as a sub-committee. The events were well supported, the tug-of-war being very closely contested both for the regimental and garrison prizes, the latter being carried off by a team of the Yorkshire men. The donkey race was a feature of the day. The prizes were distributed by Mrs. Davidson, who had a kind and encouraging word for each recipient.

21st Royal Scots Fusiliers. A correspondent writes:—"All available men (about 300) of above battalion proceeded by march route from Dover to Lydd on the 10th inst., for a course of field-firing, halting at Shorncliffe and New Romney going and returning. In addition to the beneficial results from the shooting practice, the course of instruction which this portion of the battalion have received in pitching and striking camp and generally living in the field cannot be over estimated, and it is scarcely fair to call a man a soldier who is destitute of the knowledge of this part of his profession. I will just mention that at Shorncliffe going it took the men 23 minutes to strike camp (35 tents), pack them in waggons, and dress in complete marching-order. When at the same place, returning, and to the immense wonder of the bystanders and to the great credit of their commander, Col. Gildea, A.D.C., and the officers and men, it was accomplished in exactly five and a half minutes, and fully 200 of those men formed part of our civilian population six months ago, and had never seen a tent before this march. With music, dancing, and all sorts of games, in which the civilians joined at the different halting-places, the battalion made itself most popular, and returned home on the 17th inst. full of life and vigour; two men only fell out during the march. The result of the field firing was very good, the average per-centage of hits being over 30 to rounds fired; the wonderful score of over 50 being secured at those long ranges of the first stage. Mr. Carr, formerly musketry-instructor to the battalion, had charge, under the directions of Col. Gildea, A.D.C., of representing an enemy for all stages of the course, and most effectually did he show up those canvas lines, columns, guns, gunners, and heads peeping from out their trenches, to a skilful representation of reality."

The honorary secretary will be glad to receive any communication from and give every information to any member late of the corps with whom, not knowing his address, he has been unable to correspond. Subscription list, and proceedings of a meeting held on July 3 by officers of and late of the regiment, will be forwarded on application to Lieut.-Col. Major Phillips, the popular paymaster of the regiment, left head-quarters, Guernsey, on the 12th inst., for a tour of foreign service in Bermuda with the York and Lancaster Regt. During the five years Major Phillips has been attached to the Middlesex Regt., he has won the esteem and regard of all ranks, not alone for the bonhomie of his personal disposition, but also for the courteous manner in which he performed his official duties. He was entertained by the officers of the regiment at a farewell dinner, when all expressed their regret at his departure. Major Phillips will probably return to England in about 18 months, with the rank of Staff Paymaster.

87th Royal Irish Fusiliers. The remains of the late Lieut.-Col. Henry Boys Harvey, formerly of the regiment, and for many years on the personal Staff of the late Lord Frederick FitzClarence, were interred on the 17th inst., in the cemetery of St. Mary's Church, Dover. The funeral was attended by Gen. Sir Edward Selby-Smyth, K.C.M.G., and Capt. Frederick Campbell, relatives of the deceased. Lieut.-Col. Harvey had been for a long time in infirm health, and died on the 13th inst., aged 75.

90th Cameronians (Scottish Rifles). A correspondent writes from India:—"Cawnpore has been again enlivened by the 'Apollo' Minstrels. Two new programmes have been produced recently with remarkable success, owing to the studied manner in which the performances were rendered. Messrs. Cooke, O'Donnell, and Johnson particularly distinguished themselves in the 'funny' business, if I may be allowed to particularise where all were good. An efficient orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Yetman, contributes largely to the success of these entertainments, which are managed and conducted by Schoolmaster Townley."

96th Manchester Regiment. Lieuts. Johnson and Davis are en route to India in H.M.S. Serapis.

A correspondent writes:—"With reference to a paragraph in last Saturday's issue, in which it is explained that Major Cattell owed his promotion to the rank of Lieut.-Col. and Chief Paymaster, vice Ball, retired, to the fact of his having formerly served in the Pay Sub-Department of the late Control Department, permit me to point out that 'para. 42, Army Circulars 170, of Oct., 1877,' quoted in support of this view, is not applicable to Major Cattell's case, and contains no authority for such promotion, but merely for that of 'Deputy Paymasters then serving, to the rank of Staff Paymaster, on vacancies occurring therein, among officers who held the rank of Paymaster should they not otherwise obtain promotion to the higher rank.' The only regulation now in force which can be quoted as explanatory of Lieut.-Col. Cattell's promotion is para 3, clause 2, Army Circulars Jan., 1881, which rules that all promotions to the grade of Chief Paymaster shall be given entirely for ability and merit."

Medical Department. Deputy-Surg.-Gen. Tarrant, Surgs.-Major Farrell and White, and Surgs. Hayes, Addison, Reckett, Young, Jameson, Evans, Collie, and Quicke are en route to India in H.M.S. Serapis.

MILITIA.

The following are the principal changes in the new regulations of the Militia relative to training and payment:—A recruit who enlists into a brigade of artillery or into a battalion of infantry may perform his first year's drill as follows:—If enlisted more than three months before the date of the annual training, by attending on enlistment for 56 days at the depôt, and subsequently for 27 days' training with his regiment, or by attending the preliminary drill and training of his regiment; if enlisted within three months, but not more than 56 days before the date fixed for the annual training, by attending on enlistment for 83 days at the depôt and not joining for the current training, or by attending the preliminary drill and training; if enlisted during the first seven days of preliminary drill, by attending on enlistment the remaining period of preliminary drill and training, or after the first seven days, but not less than 56 days from the end of training, by attending for 56 days only with his regiment; and if enlisted during the preliminary drill, but within 56 days of the termination of the training, by attending on enlistment for 83 days at the depôt, or by attending the preliminary drill and training of his regiment for the following year. The present regulations for the drill of recruits who enlist into the Engineer Militia will remain in force. In the case of Militia battalions of the King's Royal Rifle Corps and the Rifle Brigade, recruits who elect to drill on enlistment, or are required to do so by the regulations, will be sent to the head-quarters of the regimental district nearest to their own head-quarters. Recruits who elect to drill on enlistment will be sent on enlistment to the head-quarters of the regimental district, or to the Royal Artillery depôt, where they will undergo instruction for a period of 56 days. Bounty will not be paid on enlistment, but after drill and training as above specified, and then with certain exceptions. Thus a recruit who on joining is found to be permanently unfit for service will not be granted bounty, but providing he has performed a portion of the drill, will be paid £1. Other clauses state that "a recruit enlisted for an Engineer Militia regiment will, on completing the preliminary drill and training prescribed for Engineer Militia, be granted a bounty of £1 10s. A Militia recruit who, although not entitled to the privileges of a re-enlisted man, has previously served in Regular Forces or Militia, and who, in consequence of such service, may be exempted from drill on enlistment, or from being called out for preliminary drill with the recruits of his corps, will be granted a bounty of £1 10s. at the termination of his first training. An annual bounty of £1 will, subject to the restrictions hereinafter contained, be paid to every Militiaman on the expiration of his annual training. The annual bounty will be paid to a Militiaman, other than a recruit, who attends preliminary drill or training, and is dismissed on account of any physical disability other than that specified. The annual bounty will not be paid to a Militiaman who is absent from preliminary drill or training in consequence of sickness, whether or not he is discharged on account of permanent unfitness; to a Militiaman who is absent from a training by permission of his commanding officer; to a Militiaman who, on the assembly of his regiment for preliminary drill or training after medical examination, is dismissed to his home as being temporarily or permanently unfit for duty in consequence of sickness which is certified to be the result of his own misconduct; and to a Militiaman who is unlawfully absent from preliminary drill or training for a period exceeding 14 days, or who is absent for a period of 14 days by reason of being in custody, either civil or military, unless the custody is detention which results in an acquittal or dismissal of the charge."

The Standard says:—"The efficiency of the local forces in the colony of Victoria having received the serious consideration of the Colonial Office, steps have been taken to secure the necessary instructors for both officers and non-commissioned officers of the Victorian Local Forces, and the co-operation of the War Office has resulted in the approval by the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief of the under-mentioned officers and non-commissioned officers of the British Army being placed at the disposal of the Colonial Government, to fill the posts of instructors to the above forces, viz.:—Major T. R. Disney, R.A., to be commandant; Capt. P. H. T. Fellowes, 1st Batn. East Surrey Regt., as staff officer of infantry; Major Brownrigg, 4th Batn. Rifle Brigade, as brigade-major, and head of the Local Military School of Instruction for officers and non-commissioned officers of the above forces; two non-commissioned officers of infantry and one of cavalry as instructors to a corps of mounted infantry, which new service is to be formed for special duty in the colony. The pay of these non-commissioned officers will be at the rate of £180 a year, with free quarters and clothing, and they will be engaged for five years, which may be renewed by permission of the Colonial Government, and their service in this capacity will count towards pension on their return to this country."

Gunmaking is almost at a standstill in the Government factories at Woolwich, and orders are anxiously awaited to make up for lost time. The transition of the national armament from muzzle-loading to breech-loading is still suspending new operations and arresting new enterprises, and scarcely a large gun has been made or a heavy coil turned out for five or six months past. The introduction of steel, although only in the experimental stages, has quite supplanted wrought iron bars, and the rolling and coiling mills are consequently almost closed. The gun factories are, however, busy, owing to the additional labour involved in constructing the fittings for the breech-loading appliances, which require great ingenuity and nicety of construction, and the character of the handicraft which at the present time distinguishes the department has not been equalled since breech-loaders went out of fashion 20 years ago.

The special correspondent of the Kölnische Zeitung gives in that paper his impressions of the Italian Army during the manœuvres at Voghera. He blames the infantry for the irregularity of their lines and want of uniformity in carriage of arms. He praises the admirable regularity and close dressing of the marines. He thinks the appearance of the chief officers' horses very good, but finds that those of the adjutants are of too clumsy a build, although they did good service during the manœuvres. The resolute, frank, easy, and rapid marching of the Bersaglieri aroused his admiration. He calls that force the élite of the army. He was satisfied with the marching of the artillery and the promptness of their manœuvres, although they might have kept their line better. He found the cavalry superior to his expectation, the soldiers sitting well—much better than the French; but both officers and men press their animals with their thighs. The whole effect of the manœuvres corresponded with the special care taken to instruct the cavalry.

Army & Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1883.

"AS for the European populations in China, write them down as identical with those in Egypt in all affairs." Colonel Gordon knows them both, and his opinion, in all its trenchant truth, is well worth attention at home. But we pity him, for all that. Can he not measure the distance from Jaffa to Alexandria, and is he not aware that his words will be quoted in Egypt, and that they will raise such a howl there among the Europeans as never has been heard there since June 11 in the streets of Alexandria? For, says he, pursuing the even tenour of his way, in reckless truthfulness, "their sole idea is, without any distinction of nationality, to have increased power over China" (Egypt) "for their own trade," and opening up the country, "as they call it, and any war would be popular with them, so they will egg on any Power to make it." The hard-headed, energetic correspondent of the Times in Egypt gave an amusing—well, it was not that, it was startling—instance and illustration of the way in which a European in Egypt looks at any question affecting the policy of Great Britain, and our relations with Egypt, in an analysis he gave the other day of the answers of twenty-five Europeans to his question regarding the course they would pursue if the British garrison were withdrawn. He really seemed to think that their opinions clenched the nail that fastens the Army of Occupation there for ever. To him, the whole of Egypt was represented by the European squatters in Cairo and Alexandria. As to asking an "Egyptian" for his opinion, he would as soon have thought of asking the Egyptian's donkey! "They would all go or send their families away," cries he, as if the instant dissolution of the land of Egypt, which got on pretty well even after the Jews left it long ago, would be the immediate consequence of the departure of Brown and Tadpole, Argyropoulo Brothers, Stavrides, and Lingi Farniente. It is with the passions and prejudices and selfishness of these advanced guards of civilisation that the Ministers of the Crown have to deal, and the difficulty of their task is increased by the natural tendency of large masses of people at home to support the demands of their fellows abroad, and to view with disfavour any action of the home Government which tends to repress the exercise of the domineering and appropriating spirit which is the attribute of "conquering races." If the colonists and settlers would but throw off the cloak under which they veil their egotism and cupidity, and instead of hypocritical professions that they have come abroad at great inconvenience to themselves to plant the standard of Christianity and civilisation (with a little cotton and opium here and there), and to work for the good of the people among whom they live, in return for which they demand exclusive privileges, and the support of the Fleet and the Army on all occasions, they would have at least the credit due to such honesty as Pierre—"a gay, bold-faced villain as thou seest me"—claimed; but when they assume to themselves the attributes of an almost Divine beneficence, they awaken feelings of indignation and contempt. Far be it from us to deride the efforts of the great and good men who worthily fulfil the highest duties of Christians, and set a bright example to the heathen in their lives and principles, or to brand the majority of our own countrymen who may be settled in foreign lands as self-seeking, covetous, and prejudiced oppressors of their fellows; but we do hold that the masses of Europeans in the Chinese cities and the swarms of Levantines who in Egypt represent Europe, are the worst possible counsellors and advisers in questions between the natives and the foreigners, and that their readiness to invoke the aid of force, unless for the purposes of absolute protection to life and property, is to be resisted most strenuously. There is a Chauvinism among Englishmen as well as other people, and we scarcely think that the Egyptians will recognise as a prominent quality the justice of the supremacy which imposes on them highly-paid officials, who cannot be provided for at home, and which creates new offices for their behoof; but although the Fellah may never have heard of Sir Edward Malet, he has unwittingly felt the influence of his humane and generous nature in the amelioration of his lot, and in the wise and kindly counsels he has given to the rulers of the country, and to the voice of such men the country should never be deaf.

We are in a position to state that there is no foundation for the report as to the probable early increase of the list of Field-Marshals, and there never has been the slightest idea of conferring a bâton on Lord Wolseley. It is perfectly true that the establishment is six officers, and there therefore exist two vacancies; hence, no doubt, the statements which have been published.

Report says, and says truly, we believe, that in one district only one officer succeeded in qualifying at the recent examination for promotion. There were altogether nearly 200 disappointed, taking the United Kingdom all through!

In one distinguished Cavalry regiment there will be a great clearing of the commissioned lists shortly. Many of the officers having seen the papers which were placed before those who presented themselves at the recent examination, have declared their intention of quitting the service, rather than go through the farce of a theoretical test, the passing of which is no criterion at all of a man's military ability or taste for his profession.

The Army Hospital Corps is certainly earning for itself a most unenviable notoriety. Scarcely a week passes but we receive letters from non-commissioned officers and men complaining of the treatment accorded them under the present régime. The doctors complain that the men enlisted for the corps are not of the right stamp. This, perhaps, may be the case. But what about the officers selected to command them? "A good mistress makes a good maid." On the same principle, a good commander is pretty certain to have a good regiment. It is scarcely to be expected that a man who has received a special training in one profession can all at once acquire the tastes, &c., necessary to fit him to carry out successfully the duties of another. A bishop may be very good as a preacher, but if he was suddenly called upon to carry out the duties of a judge on the Bench, he would doubtless fail signally. Those of the members of the Army Medical Department who aspire to military rank and command seem to forget that to make a successful commander a man ought to undergo a practical training. The combatant officers do not wish to encroach on the prerogatives of their medical comrades in arms. Then why should the doctors desire to become soldiers? It is time the curtain fell on the farce which has been too long enacted at Aldershot. So long as matters remain as they are, we can never expect the Army Hospital Corps to improve either in discipline or efficiency. The non-commissioned officers and men must naturally feel the false position in which they are placed, and resent the indignity, for it is an indignity, they are made to suffer. Depend upon it, there is only one way out of the difficulty, and that is the one we have advocated from the first,—viz., the relegation of all "Commanding Officer Doctors" to their proper functions.

A wrangler who saw the mathematical paper given at the last competitive examination for commissions in the Army pronounced it a very hard one, and said it "required a man with a great deal of originality and invention in mathematics to set such a paper." But if "originality" and "invention" were necessary for the setting of the paper, what qualifications must those have been supposed to possess who were called upon to answer it?

It must not be supposed that the vexed question of Commissariat and Transport organisation has been dropped at the War Office since the close of the Egyptian Campaign. Both Sir Edward Morris and his able assistant, Assistant-Commissary-General Randall, C.B., are known to possess very strong views, which are, in most respects, entirely in accord; and it may reasonably be supposed that they will carry through if they can those changes which have been shown to be necessary for the good of the service. We must not, however, lose sight of the difficulties against which they have to labour. But they are not the men to let the grass grow under their feet, and the Army can look forward with confidence to sweeping changes ere long, the tendency of which will be to remove many blots now existing, if they do not actually give us that perfect organisation which we have been endeavouring for years past in vain to establish.

It is well that candidates for the Army Pay Department—who do not, by the way, appear at present to be coming forward very rapidly—should consider, among other points, the prospects of promotion. Since the creation of the Department in April, 1878, five and a half years ago, promotion has been unquestionably rapid, averaging nineteen steps a year. This rate, however, cannot possibly be expected to continue during, say, the next ten years, as the compulsory retirements on the score of age, which are necessarily the main cause of steps arising, number during the next decade only about forty. According to the official "Birthday Book," the compulsory retirements amongst Chief and Staff Paymasters on attaining sixty years of age will be:—In 1884, Large, Mahony, Campbell, Baird, and George; in 1885, Rouse, Bryson, and Dring; in 1886, Wray, Swinburne, Nowlan, Foster, and Pumfret; in 1887, Morris, Minchin, and Leigh; in 1888, Fereday, Dundee, Wolfe, Cuming, Longden, and Davidson; in 1889, Huddlestone, Thomson, Samwell, and M'Gachen; in 1890, Ewing, Thorpe, Craig, Creagh, and O'Kelly; in 1891, Olivey, Macdonnell, and Greenwood; in 1892, none; and in 1893, Lukin, Bacon, Forbes, and Boyle; total, 38; and there is one more certain step this year, Major Timbrell, in December. Now, if we assume that the same number retire voluntarily, that will give about eight steps per annum. This cannot be considered a particularly brilliant prospect for any officer now joining the Department, with 170 Paymasters before him, before he can attain even the grade of Staff Paymaster.

A very able and energetic officer lately appointed to a Militia adjutancy has made, we understand, after careful investigation, carried out with commendable discretion, a most useful discovery. The country, it appears, has been for some years past subjected to a system of fraud, which has cost it many thousands a year. We are not in a position to state yet what the discovery is; suffice it that it has been made. What reward, we wonder, will this officer get for the useful service he has performed!

A Volunteer commanding officer, especially in the larger centres of industry, has great difficulties in making both ends meet; indeed, it would be almost impossible for him to provide everything that is necessary to ensure efficiency, but for the subscriptions paid by himself and his officers. As an instance of some of the disappointments encountered by our Citizen Army, we may quote the case of a metropolitan regiment having its head-quarters in Gray's Inn. Some years ago, by the liberality of its officers, the corps in question was enabled to erect a drill-shed on a site secured for the purpose in Gray's Inn Road. The Metropolitan Board of Works has lately been carrying out improvements in this neighbourhood, and, in order to do so, obtained powers to purchase certain properties, with the view of widening this now important thoroughfare. Among other buildings which had to be secured, this said drill-shed was one. The price fixed upon by the Board as compensation was £500,—scarcely one-third of the original cost. Thus the corps finds itself homeless for the time being, and, in order to supply a pressing want, it will have to raise fresh capital. There are so many heavy drains on the Government capitation grant, that no money can be looked for from this source. The officers, therefore, will have to make up the deficiency. We cannot complain, of course, of the action of the Metropolitan Board of Works. That body has acted in perfect good-faith. It is, nevertheless, hard on the regiment that it should have to suffer, when the service its members are performing is a national one. Volunteers, it has to be remembered, give their services voluntarily to the State, and make great sacrifices of time in doing so. It certainly is unfair that they should be called upon to give time and money too; but it speaks well for the patriotism of Englishmen that they should do what they do, and do it in such an uncomplaining spirit.

In the matter of promotion, the 87th Fusiliers cannot be considered a fortunate regiment. Its senior subaltern completed in July last his seventeenth year of service. It has been the boast of successive War Ministers since the abolition of Purchase that the Army has now been made a profession. So, perhaps, it has, but Lieutenant Adams has little cause to congratulate himself on the progress he has made in the "glorious profession" of which he is such an exceptionally unfortunate member. With retirement staring him in the face at forty years of age, his prospects are certainly not encouraging.

More than one officer who was at home on leave from Natal has suddenly been called upon to proceed at once to rejoin the head-quarters of his regiment. Is this to be accepted as proof that the Government anticipate troubles in South Africa, or are we to attribute it to a policy of precaution? We believe that the latter explanation will be the one nearest the truth. Although it is hoped and believed that matters will settle down in Zululand—i.e., it is so thought in Downing Street, for it certainly is not at the Cape—it has been deemed to be a wise policy to have everything ready in case an appeal to arms should become necessary. We have learnt something from past experience. That "something" may not be much, perhaps, but it is satisfactory to know that we have profited, if only to a very limited extent, by the lessons of the Zulu and Transvaal Campaigns. The fact of our having a Cavalry regiment in Natal is one point gained; for, be it remembered, it was to the absence of cavalry, and the consequent inability to keep up the communications, that the disaster at Isandhlwana was mainly, if not entirely, due.

If the accounts which reach us from Natal be true—and there is no reason to doubt their trustworthiness—the state of affairs with regard to the British forces garrisoning some, at least, of the posts on the frontier is simply lamentable. One officer writes:—"It is earnestly to be hoped that we may not have to go to the front in our present condition. If we do have to fight, it will be a short business, and not a man of us will come out of it." There is more in the same strain. "England expects that every man will do his duty." She should see, though, that when work has to be done, her soldiers are in proper fighting form, and are not simply sent before an enemy to act as food for the enemy, as those would be who have lately been undergoing such severe hardships in South Africa.

The results of the match fired at Tottenham on Thursday between teams of the serjeants of the Brigade of Guards and the North London Rifle Club were just what had been anticipated, the Volunteers showing by their large majority of 161 points that they were better by a little over 10 points each than their opponents. The cause of this is not far to seek. Nearly all the club team are well-known shots; indeed, two of them were Queen's gold medallists, and two Queen's silver medallists—men who have abundant opportunity for practice, and the means wherewith to carry it out; while it may fairly be said with respect to the Guards that, even if they could avail themselves of the limited time at their disposal for range work, the cost of ammunition and the necessarily attendant travelling expenses are not within the reach of all. We understand that the serjeants of the Brigade, having now been beaten by North London, are anxious to try their skill with the South London Club. Would it not be better, at any rate for the present, to challenge the serjeants of one of the Volunteer Battalions in the Home District?

An appeal has been made by the Serjeant-Major of the Gymnastic Staff at Aldershot to the public generally to subscribe a trifle of £2,000 to "build baths" in connection with the "Church of England Soldiers' Institute," recently erected in the centre of the town (not the camp) of Aldershot. It is said that if these baths were constructed, a great boon would be conferred on the soldiers in the command returning "hot and dusty from the Long Valley," and who would then have an opportunity of a plunge, which they have not now. This is a delightful and refreshing picture, but, unfortunately, altogether delusive. It is a liberal estimate, to suppose that 1 per cent. of the troops returning from a divisional field-day would, even if they could, avail themselves of the use of such baths. The tyro in military matters is well aware that on return from a field-day, the soldier has other things to think about, and other work to do, instead of dressing up in walking-out costume to proceed to the town (perhaps two miles off) for a bath.

She left Sourabaya on the 23rd, and arrived at Batavia on July 28. Great discontent has been caused by the small amount of leave given to the men. Leave has only been granted from 1 to 6 p.m., and then merely to special leave men on Thursdays and Sundays. The Champion then proceeded to Singapore, where Capt. THE CHANNEL SQUADRON.

Portland, Thursday, September 20.

Last Friday we had "ram-oh" and general quarters in the forenoon, and in the afternoon there was a very pleasant dance on board the Agincourt. This week has been almost entirely devoted to "soldiering." The small-arm men of the Squadron have been formed into three battalions, the first being of eight companies from the Minotaur and Northumberland, under the command of Lieut. Bethell, of the Minotaur; the second of eight companies from the Agincourt and Achilles, under the command of Lieut. Bailey, of the Achilles; and the third of seven companies, four from the Sultan, two from the Neptune, and one from the Valorous (which arrived on Monday evening), under the command of Com. Curzon, of the Sultan. The field guns, of which there are twelve, two from each ship, are in two batteries, under the command of Lieut. Field, of the Sultan. On Monday, after sail drill and man and arm boats in the forenoon, the 1st and 2nd battalions landed for drill in the afternoon. On Tuesday, all three battalions and the field guns were exercised in the forenoon at skirmishing and attacking, going through nearly the same movements that they had on the previous Thursday, with the exception that there was a small force consisting of two companies and two guns representing the enemy. On Wednesday, all the Marines, under Col. French, of the flagship, were landed in the forenoon, and the 3rd Batn. and field guns in the afternoon. This forenoon, a review before the Admiral took place, which has brought our landing operations to a close for the present. The whole force, under the command of Com. Hammet, of the Minotaur, was drawn up in line of battalions in quarter-column, with the guns on the right, the Marines, who formed the 4th Batn., of which the right-half were Artillery and the left Light Infantry, being on the left. On the Admiral's arrival on the ground, he was received with the general salute, the batteries firing 15 guns, after which he inspected the men. The brigade then marched past in column, the guns leading, then in mass of quarter-columns at the trail, and then at the double. The guns were then exercised at firing, dismounting, &c., and the crews put through the cutlass exercise, a battalion of small-arm men deployed and put through the manual and firing exercise, and the Marine Light Infantry put through the bayonet exercise. The brigade then reformed as at the commencement, advanced, and saluted. At the conclusion, the Admiral sent for all the battalion and company commanders, and expressed to them his great satisfaction at the manner in which everything had been executed, both at the review and on Tuesday while skirmishing, and said that he hoped the Lords of the Admiralty would have an opportunity of inspecting the men next month. We were not favoured with fine weather, as it rained heavily for about a quarter of an hour just before the Admiral's arrival, and was drizzling and showery nearly the whole time. But it cleared up towards the end, and we were able to go through the whole programme as it had been laid down. Despite the weather, there was a great number of on-lookers. A good word should be said for the bandsmen, who played up manfully through the rain. Afternoon dances have set in with great severity this week, as there are three on consecutive days. Yesterday, one was given by the Achilles, to-day by the Boscawen, and to-morrow by the Minotaur. The Squadron cricket team has played two matches. They were beaten on Saturday by the Weymouth Club, but succeeded in defeating the Queen's Regiment on Tuesday. They are to play a return match with the Queen's to-day (Saturday). We leave on Monday.

NAVAL JUSTICE.

Sir,—The consistency with which matters connected with that gallant corps, the Royal Marines, are now carried out by the Admiralty cannot be better gauged or demonstrated than by a comparison of the London Gazettes of Sept. 4, 1883, and Aug. 14, 1883. In the former, two officers of long-standing in the service, who had been promoted to field rank for some time, have such promotions cancelled, because they have "failed to pass the prescribed examination" (I quote the Gazette), but who, however, have never been examined, not having presented themselves for examination at all, from sheer ignorance that it was necessary for them to do so; whilst in the latter, two young officers are transferred to the Royal Marine Artillery who had equally "failed to pass the prescribed examination." Comment is needless, save to remark that the junior transferred officer has the happiness to be the son of a principal clerk in the Admiralty; and yet we are expected to believe that, with a Liberal Government, there is no

Jobbery!

COMMANDER MAXWELL-HERON.

Sir,—Can it be true that Mr. Swainson, of the Admiralty Office, is deputed, in the absence of Sir Staveley Hill, to draw up and lay the case of Com. Maxwell-Heron before the Law Officers of the Crown? I hardly believe this to be possible. Is English fair-play a bygone tradition? Here is one of the three prosecutors on the Clyde court-martial (though he had no business there) who took an active part in trying to convict the gallant officer on utterly false charges, passing notes during the trial to the Government prosecutor, for which he was called to order by the prisoner's "friend." I shall rejoice if you can contradict the report.—I am, &c.,

THE ARSENALS OF CHINA.—I.

At the present time, when a war between China and France appears possible, some particulars of the various arsenals and dockyards possessed by the Chinese may be interesting. There are five arsenals, viz., at Tientsin, Nankin, Shanghai, Foochow, and Canton; and there are dockyards at Shanghai and Foochow. There is another arsenal in the process of formation at Port Arthur. The Nankin Arsenal, founded in 1861 by Dr. Macartney, of the 99th Regiment, was the first one in which modern ideas of the manufacture of war material were introduced. This is situated outside the walls of Nankin, some ten miles distant from the magnificent Yangtze River. Though not covering any great extent of ground, yet a considerable amount of completed work is turned out in the course of the year, equal to, if not exceeding in quantity and quality, that at Tientsin and Foochow, which is all the more creditable, as it is entirely managed and worked by the Chinese. Here is to be found an iron foundry, with steam hammer and all the machinery and workshops necessary for constructing light field-guns and Remington rifles and cartridges. A few Gatling machine-guns and Pirie rifles have also been constructed at this arsenal, and the latter system has been very cleverly adapted by the Mandarin in charge to a weapon known as the "two-man gun." This piece is 6 ft. in length, with a calibre of 1 in., and weighs some 40 lb. It is intended to be carried by two men,—one supports it on his shoulder, while the other fires it. A considerable number of field-guns have lately been constructed at the Nankin Arsenal on the model of the Krupp steel guns; but the Chinese weapons are built of wrought iron, though of precisely the same dimensions as the model steel gun, and as the same charge of powder and weight of projectile is fired, it is extremely probable serious accidents will ensue. A machine-gun on the model of the Nordenfelt four-barrelled 1-in. gun, the same dimensions being adopted in the copy as in the original, but an inferior quality of wrought and cast iron being used, when fired at Tientsin not only burst two barrels, but destroyed its mechanism. The Chinese Government intend to establish a branch torpedo school at Nankin, and also to construct a system of submarine defence of the Yangtze River. This arsenal is situated some distance from the mouth of the Yangtze, and there are many passes which could be easily rendered impassable. An English Fleet once succeeded in forcing its way to Nankin, but not in the face of torpedoes, forts armed with heavy guns, and the Armstrong gunboats, each of which is armed with one very heavy gun, many of which the Chinese now possess. Further north we come to the Tientsin Arsenal, cartridge and gunpowder factories, which are erected within the outer mud wall of that city. The cartridge factory is established on the site of the temple in which Lord Elgin signed the treaty of peace in 1860. In this factory, in addition to the Remington and other small-arm cartridges, are manufactured electric cables, the machinery for effecting which is said to have been devised by the Mandarin in charge. A so-called submarine boat, which has never yet been submerged, was also built at this factory. On the opposite or north side of the river are situated the gunpowder factory and the arsenal, the former of which turns out but a comparatively small quantity of powder, and that of a very inferior quality. The arsenal is surrounded by a wall, which encloses an immense tract of ground, but as the buildings as yet erected are but few in number, and at considerable distances apart, it presents a very straggling appearance. Remington rifles, Gatling machine-guns, shot and shell for heavy guns, submarine cases, electrical fuzes, batteries, &c., are manufactured in this arsenal; the Nordenfelt four-barrelled 1-in. gun is also being copied here, twenty-four of those weapons having been lately purchased by the Chinese Government. A few miles above the Taku Forts, at the mouth of the Peiho River, two small dry docks have lately been constructed, for the docking of the Armstrong gunboats, the larger number of which are stationed here. In these days of submarine mines, fast torpedo boats (some of which have lately been built in Germany for the Chinese), the Whitehead, Lay, and Spar torpedoes, heavy guns, casemated forts, electric lights, and other modern appliances of warfare, to force the entrance of the Peiho River, defended by a combination of these means, would present a formidable, if not impossible undertaking, even with the aid of a powerful fleet. And besides all this, the shallow flats which extend for several miles to seaward, and the existence of a sand-bar only passable at the top of high-water by the larger vessels, afford natural strength to the position, which was made unpleasantly apparent to our ships when, some twenty-five years ago, we failed in an attempt to force the entrance; and at that period, the Chinese means of attack and defence were comparatively limited and inferior. Further, the heavily-armed forts and earthworks that have been erected during the last few years would prevent a repetition of that masterly stroke of landing our troops at Pehtang, on the coast, some few miles to the northward of Taku, by which we were enabled to assault those works from the rear, a mode of proceeding designated by the Chinese as quite unfair. At Port Arthur, or Port Li, as it has been renamed, in honour of the Governor of the Northern Provinces, his Excellency Li Hun Chang, an arsenal and dockyard, with two large dry docks, is now being established. Port Li lies on the sea coast of the Shing Kin province, in the Gulf of Liantung, a few miles to the northward of Taku, and has been chosen for its natural capabilities as a harbour for the northern division of the Imperial Navy of China. The bar at Taku being impassable during a strong northwesterly wind for all but the lightest-draught vessels, necessitated a more accessible harbour. Returning south, we come to the arsenal and dockyard of Shanghai, some fourteen miles up the Woosung River. This establishment was commenced in a small way in 1865, for the special manufacture of Remington rifles and cartridges, but has gradually developed into the principal Naval dockyard of China, and its arsenal is the sole one where heavy guns and armour-plates are constructed. The heavy guns are muzzle-loaders on the original Armstrong or Woolwich system of construction, and are built under the supervision of an English manager, employed formerly at the Woolwich Arsenal; and according to the results of trials made with these weapons, they appear to be as well manufactured as those turned out at Woolwich and Elswick. As soon as the necessary machinery has been erected, breech-loading guns are also to be constructed. Here also are manufactured shot and shell for the heavy guns; and lately a special establishment has been formed for the construction of torpedoes, with all their attendant material, which is also under the direction of an Englishman. Very little in the way of shipbuilding has been attempted of late years. A small ironclad monitor (Terror of Western Nations) was constructed at the Shanghai Dockyard, but judging from this specimen, it is extremely doubtful if any further attempts will as yet be made in this direction. There is also a gunpowder factory at Shanghai, which has been the scene of one, if not more, serious explosions, where a considerable amount of powder is manufactured (twenty tons per week), and of very fair quality. The actual amount of work that has been carried out at the Shanghai gun factory is as follows:—20 7-in. 7½-ton guns, 40 40-pounders, 10 80-pounders, 110 4-pounders; and there are in process of construction the following pieces:—20 8-in. 12-ton guns, 20 9-in. 18-ton do., 12 6-in. 4-ton do, 10 80-pounders, besides wrought-iron and wooden carriages and slides for the same. The next arsenal and dockyard is that of Foochow, which was founded by Lieutenant Giquel, of the French Navy, and reflects the greatest credit on him. The city of Foochow lies in the province of Fukien, and is situated some 35 miles up the Min River, and about half-way between Shanghai on the north and the British possession of Hong Kong on the south. The arsenal and dockyard are established on the north side of the river, near what is known as the Pagoda Anchorage, some 10 miles nearer the mouth than the city. In the earlier days of the establishment of this arsenal and dockyard, when under the supervision of its founder, a vast deal of war material was completed in the course of the year, and some men-of-war were also built here; but of late there has been but little activity in the arsenal, the dockyard now being only used for the needful repairs of the Foochow Fleet, and it is in contemplation to remove the machinery and plant to the arsenal at Canton. By means of a proper system of submarine defence and land works, the passage of the Min River could be rendered almost impassable. The sixth and most southern of the arsenals of China is at Canton, on the Chan Kiang or Canton River, some 50 miles distant from Hong Kong. Here the staple manufacture is that of small-arms and their ammunition; and as well, a few Nordenfelt four-barrelled 1-in. guns are being constructed here. This arsenal, as well as those at Foochow and Nankin, is entirely managed and worked by the Chinese. The Chan Kiang offers every facility for submarine mines and land works.

NAVAL NOTES.

George Horn, chief gunner's mate, of the Duke of Wellington; Thomas J. Carnell, captain of the forecastle, of the Excellent; William Bickford, stoker, and Richard F. Parkhouse, cooper, of the Cambridge; Frank Hickman, boatman, John McCarthy, commissioned boatman, of the Coastguard; Peter Brown, yeoman of signals, of the Lord Warden; J. J. Broncrack, master-at-arms, of the Tyne; George Harrison, serjeant, late 39th Compy., R.M.L.I.; William Brown, private, R.M.L.I., of the Helicon; Ismael da Souza, bandsman, of the Euryalus, and William F. Eddy, ship's steward, 3rd class, of the Sappho, have been awarded the medal for long service and good conduct.

The Admiralty have permitted the men employed at Portsmouth, Chatham, and other Dockyards to work up time to enable them to visit the Fisheries Exhibition to-day. It is customary for their Lordships to grant the dockyard men a half-holiday on the conclusion of their annual visit of inspection; but as they will not visit the yards this year until after the Exhibition has been closed, the men have been granted the half-day in advance, the remainder being eked out by overtime.

The steam trials of the Edinburgh, late Majestic, double-screw steel armour-plated turret-ship, which have been delayed in consequence of the breaking of the crown wheel of her patent steam capstan, were commenced last week, in the Solent, under the superintendence of Capt. Colomb, of the Steam Reserve, the Admiralty being represented by Mr. R. Sennett, engineer inspecting officer. The ship steamed out of harbour and commenced a series of trials to ascertain the ratio of horse-power to the different rates of speed. The first run made was an hour at six knots, the indicated horse-power being 506, with 32·7 revolutions. A run of four hours at eight knots was subsequently made, the indicated horse-power being 710, with 41 revolutions, and a coal consumption of 2·3 lb. per horse. A run of four hours was made at a speed of ten knots, when the indicated horse-power was 1,505, with 51 revolutions, and the coal consumption 2·02 lb. per horse-power. A four hours' run was made at twelve knots, the indicated horse-power being 2,542, and the coal consumption 1·76 lb. per horse-power. The results of these progressive trials are regarded as satisfactory so far as the horse-power and the consumption of coal are concerned. The stowage of coal on board is 1,300 tons, and the distances the ship could steam with the coal carried are:—At eight knots, 14,000 miles; ten knots, 9,700 miles; and twelve knots, 7,000 miles. Experiments in rolling were then made. The Edinburgh, which was built at Pembroke, is sister-ship to the Colossus, and the trials are consequently regarded with some interest. The engines of the Edinburgh were constructed by Messrs. Humphry and Tennent, of Deptford, and those of the Colossus by Messrs. Maudslay, Sons, and Field. The steam trials of the last-named vessel are expected to take place shortly. The ship has undergone a trial of her stability at Spithead, a number of men being sent out in gunboats from the ships in harbour to roll her. The Edinburgh underwent her trial over the measured mile in Stokes Bay on Tuesday. A course was first steered down Channel, and when the easternmost end of the island had been passed the Edinburgh was circled round and brought back to Spithead, thence passing backwards and forwards on the measured mile in Stokes Bay several times, and subsequently returning down Channel. The machinery worked admirably, and there was no hitch throughout the trials. A speed of 16 knots was realised.

A court-martial assembled on board the Duncan, flagship of Vice-Admiral E. B. Rice, C.B., last Friday for the trial of John Williams, ordinary seaman, Royal Naval Barracks, Sheerness, who was charged with neglecting to perform the duties imposed upon him as sentry on Aug. 29. Capt. E. St. J. Garforth, of the Eclipse, presided. The court found the prisoner guilty, and sentenced him to 42 days' imprisonment with hard labour.

Experiments are being conducted on board the Speedy, at Portsmouth, with the view of superseding the use of the conning tower in turret-ships. The idea originated in a navigating lieutenant observing that the camera obscura on board the royal yacht reflected the position of every ship in the harbour on to the saloon table. By adopting this idea it is considered possible that the course of the firing of the guns in the turret may be directed from a lower deck, thus obviating the necessity of an officer exposing himself in the conning tower

Admiral Sir John Hay, M.P., addressing his constituents at Wigtown on Monday night, declared the British Navy to be inefficient, as compared with the superior fleet of ironclads possessed by other leading nations, such as France and Italy. He advocated additions being made to our Naval defences, if England was to retain her maritime superiority.—Hampshire Telegraph.

Admiral-Superintendent F. A. Herbert entered upon his responsible duties with remarkable energy, and already he has shown himself possessed of high administrative powers. It has been made apparent on many occasions that he takes a thoroughly conscientious view of his obligations, and the result is several improvements have been unostentatiously effected. He is now engaged in ascertaining which workshops, storehouses, offices, and other buildings under his charge do not satisfy all the requirements of the Factory Act, and he has accordingly called for a return from the departmental chiefs. That it may be of a sufficiently comprehensive character not only to facilitate his inquiries, but also to render action in the right direction practicable, the Admiral-Superintendent has expressly directed that it shall have particular reference to the relative air-space, cleanliness, whitewashing, and painting, and that comments are to be added upon how these deficiencies may be most advantageously supplied.

The Agamemnon went into the Channel on Sept. 19, for a trial of her guns and machinery in the presence of Admiral Sir Houston Stewart, Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, Rear-Admiral Brandreth, Controller of the Navy, Admiral Curme, and Captain Kelly, of the Steam Reserve, Devonport. The operations were carried out by Capt. A. Buller, C.B., the object of the trials being to test the hydraulic machinery by which the guns and turrets are worked, and also the effect of the firing upon the ship itself. This is the first time that projectiles have been discharged from the guns since they have been placed in the ship. The guns in each turret were fired singly, and then simultaneously, both in horizontal and depressed positions, and lastly a broadside was fired of the whole of the guns with which the ship is armed, the powder consumed on this broadside being 840 lb., and the projectiles representing 3,200 lb. of metal. The results were considered highly satisfactory, the machinery worked admirably, and although a considerable amount of glass and some of the lighter work of the vessel were broken and displaced, the ship herself was in no way injured by the severe concussion. Each discharge of the gun cost £12, and the range obtained was about 6,200 yards, at which distance the projectile still had a velocity of over a thousand feet per second.

The Admiralty have made several alterations in the form of medical history sheet for seamen and marines:—(1.) Space has been provided for the purpose of recording the official number of seamen and the division and company numbers of marines, and this information is to be given in every case. (2.) The sickness of men on leave is, in future, to be shown on the medical-history sheet, as directed in the foot-note on the revised form. (3.) In order to ensure compliance with the directions contained in paragraph 2 of Article 1,072 of the Queen's Regulations, the following alteration is to be made in the Queen's Regulations:—At page 473, Article 1,501, add to paragraph 3, "And the medical-history sheets of all men transferred are to accompany the transfer lists, &c., to the ships, &c., to which men are sent."

THE EIGHTY-TON GUN EXPERIMENTS.

The third of a series of experiments with the 80-ton gun was concluded at Shoeburyness on Thursday. The first two of the series were conducted on Aug. 21 and Sept. 11. The third of the series of trials, which took place on Thursday, was made against a wall 40 feet in thickness, composed entirely of granite. The range, the charge of powder, and the projectile were the same as in the former experiments. The shell struck the target about six feet above the ground, and buried itself about 18 feet. There was no clean hole left behind the projectile, the concrete nearly filling up the gap made by the shell. For purposes of defence, the wall was left perfectly useless, huge cracks running across it up to the summit, and other cracks exhibiting themselves in several directions. The wall appeared to be quite unsafe, and as the digging out of the fallen concrete to unearth the shell was proceeding, a further fall of the material took place. It was generally supposed that the projectile had not taken a direct course after it had got some distance into the concrete, but that it had swerved. The velocity of the projectile at the muzzle of the gun, as taken by Lieut. Thompson's apparatus, was registered at 1,606 ft. per second, and 1,586 ft. per second at the striking-point. The experiment, which was under the direction of Major O'Callaghan, was witnessed by Col. Fox Strangways, Commandant of the School of Gunnery; and, amongst others, by Col. Inglis, Gen. Goodenough, Major Davies, and Capt. Campbell. Although every one went under cover at the firing to shelter themselves from any stones which the concussion of the shell and the wall might have scattered about, none of these were experienced, even at so short a distance as 200 yards. Photographs were taken of the shattered wall after the experiment.

An order has been received from the Admiralty at Chatham Dockyard, directing that the services of Mr. E. A. Bernays, the superintending engineer, are to be retained until that gentleman attains the age of 65 years, his appointment being renewed annually. Mr. Bernays has had the superintendence of the large works which have been carried out at Chatham in connection with the dockyard extension.

The mechanics belonging to Sheerness Dockyard who have volunteered to go to the Island of Ascension for a short period of service in repairing the Government steamer Trinculo, employed in connection with the victualling establishments, have received orders from the Admiralty to embark on board the troopship Orontes, which will leave Sheerness on Oct. 1, with new crews for the China station, and military reliefs for the Mauritius and Ascension.

Mr. John Stephen George, boatswain of the Hector, was convicted of drunkenness by court-martial at Portsmouth yesterday, and sentenced to lose one year's seniority and to be dismissed his ship.

"It costs the United States fourteen millions a year to keep up the navy we have not got," exclaims an indignant New York contemporary, and we can sympathise with the indignation. But in this country, where war is carried on "on the principles of peace," where treaties are only spoken of as "transactions" or "its," and where Ambassadors to the Vatican send "communications" instead of despatches—we cannot, on account of shortcomings in the Navy, echo the shout "Hurrah for the knavery department!" We call it the Admiralty Department.—Globe.

Obituary.

Lieut.-Col. F. D. Harington, Bengal S.C., Deputy Commissioner at Goojerat, in the Punjab, died there on the 13th inst. He was a son of the late Sir Henry Harington, K.C.S.I., and entered the Army in 1854, served throughout the Sonthal campaign of 1855, and obtained a lieutenancy in the following year. He became Capt. 12th Bengal N.I. in 1865, was promoted to Major in 1874, and attained the rank of Lieut.-Col. in 1880.

Dr. J. R. Holman, M.D., Deputy-Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets (retired), died on Wednesday at Gipsy Hill, Norwood, aged 59. Dr. Holman entered the Navy as assistant-surgeon in the year 1847. He served in two Arctic expeditions in her Majesty's ship Phœnix, commanded by the present Admiral Sir E. Inglefield, K.C.B. He was afterwards selected by Sir John Liddell, with her Majesty's approval, to accompany the Prince of Wales, as surgeon of the Osborne, the first time his Royal Highness ever went to sea, in 1860. For his services and attention to the Prince he received a letter of thanks from Sir Charles Phipps, in the name of her Majesty and the Prince Consort, together with a very handsome emerald and diamond ring. He was specially nominated by the Prince to accompany him a second time, in 1869, as staff surgeon of her Majesty's ship Ariadne, when his Royal Highness and the Princess of Wales visited the Mediterranean and Black Sea. Since then, Dr. Holman was employed as fleet surgeon of the flagships on the China and Mediterranean stations and at home.

Her complement is 337 men. The Atalante, armour-plated, 3,825 tons, carrying six guns of 19 centimètres, of which two are in the turrets and four in the batteries, and six of 14 on deck and four revolver-guns. Her complement is 317 men. The Tourville, one of the finest types of cruisers of the first class. She was launched in 1876, and is entirely of iron. Her complement is 350 men. Her armament consists of a formidable battery of 14 guns of 14 centimètres and seven of 16 on deck. The ironclad Surveillante, the cruiser Château-Renaud, and the gunboat Etendard are also spoken of. The transports Shamrock, Vine-Land, Aveyron, Corrèze, and Intrépide have been got ready to go to sea immediately should they be called for.

Orders were received on Monday at the Royal Naval Barracks, Sheerness, directing a navigating party, under the command of Capt. Lord Walter Kerr, to proceed to Glasgow and take over the charge of the cruiser Arethusa, which has been built for the Government by Messrs. Napier.

Amusements.

The ST. JAMES'S THEATRE opened its doors on Monday night for the season, when the run of Mr. Stephenson's effective comedy of "Impulse" was resumed. Some changes in the original cast have been made. Mr. George Alexander is now the substitute for Mr. Dacre as Victor de Riel, Mr. Herbert Waring for Mr. Wenman as Colonel Macdonald, while Mr. Maclean takes the place of Mr. Beaumont as Sir Henry Auckland. Mrs. Kendal again delights the audience as Mrs. Beresford, and Miss Linda Dietz, as the wife only saved by accident from a bitter agony of self-reproach, and Mrs. Gaston Murray advantageously retain their former positions. Mr. Kendal has now so unduly exaggerated the character of Captain Crichton, that the part loses much of its original significance, and art is sacrificed for the sake of getting a few thoughtless laughs from the least appreciative among the audience.

At the GRAND THEATRE, Islington, Miss Minnie Palmer, the young American actress, has appeared in the odd Transatlantic "comedy" in three acts called "My Sweetheart," already familiar to playgoers in the provinces. The piece is an eccentric entertainment of dance and song, with no literary merits whatever. The varied talents of Miss Minnie Palmer, with her pretty face and vivacious manner, have, however, greatly pleased a metropolitan audience. Mr. Charles Arnold satisfactorily plays her German admirer, and Mr. T. J. Hawkins cleverly embodies a broken-down gentleman, who, though having little to do with the plot of the piece, will be recognised as its most original feature.

The ROYAL COMEDY THEATRE, brightened by the renovation it has undergone during a week's recess, is now reopened for the season with Planquette's popular comic opera of "Rip Van Winkle," already represented nearly 300 times. Miss Violet Cameron reappears as Gretchen and Alice.

The HAYMARKET will be reopened for the season on Saturday, Sept. 29, when the successful run of "Fédora" will be resumed. The COURT THEATRE will be reopened on the preceding Thursday with a new comedy by Mr. Godfrey, adapted from Mr. Edmund Yates's novel, "Kissing the Rod."

The AVENUE THEATRE, passing under the management of Mr. Alexander Henderson, will be opened on Wednesday, Oct. 3, with Offenbach's opéra-bouffe, "La Vie," of which an English version has been provided by Mr. H. B. Farnie.

The OLYMPIC is announced to open early next month, under the direction of Mrs. Chippendale. The company will probably comprise some of the more advanced pupils of the "School of Dramatic Art."

With this week, Mr. T. W. Robertson's revived comedy of "M.P." has reached its fiftieth representation at TOOLE'S THEATRE, and seems likely to remain in the programme for fifty nights longer.

Mr. Charles Duval, the author of "With a Show through Southern Africa," has taken the ST. JAMES'S HALL for a six weeks' season, and will there present his amusing entertainment of "Odds and Ends," during the last week of the present month and the whole of October.

The Moore and Burgess Minstrels on Tuesday night entered upon their nineteenth year's tenancy at ST. JAMES'S HALL, where, from Sept. 18, 1865, they have given 8,753 performances, latterly comprising engagements in the country, while their metropolitan abiding-place was being renovated and reconstructed.

Telegrams from New York, announcing the recent death of Mr. Junius Brutus Booth, the father of Mr. Edwin Booth, were published in the London evening papers of Tuesday. Some strange mistake must have arisen. The once famous actor who was the father of Mr. Edwin Booth died in the United States as long ago as Nov. 30, 1852, and his son afterwards erected a monument to the memory of his parent.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—INDISPUTABLE REMEDIES.—In the use of these medicaments there need be no hesitation or doubt of their cooling, healing, and purifying properties. Imagination can scarcely conceive the marvellous facility with which this unguent relieves and heals the most inveterate sores and ulcers, and in cases of bad legs and bad breasts they act like a charm. The Pills are the most effectual remedy ever discovered for the cure of liver and stomach complaints, diseases most disastrous in their effects, deranging all the proper functions of the organs affected, inducing restlessness, melancholy, weariness, inability to sleep, and pain in the side, until the whole system is exhausted. These wonderful Pills, if taken according to the printed directions accompanying each box, strike at the root of the malady, stimulate the stomach and liver into a healthy action, and effect a complete cure.

THE Duke of Cambridge, who has been following the manœuvres at Homburg with close attention, and has been received with the consideration and distinction due to his exalted position and his services, will, no doubt, have found additional evidence in what he observed of the enormous mistakes and absurdities of our military reforms, regarded from a national standpoint, to adduce for the consideration of the powers that be at the War Office and Horse Guards, now that he has returned to England. The Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, perhaps, would lay before them the "Order of Battle" of the 11th Army Corps, and ask them to compare it with, say, the Aldershot Division. In the first place, he would point out that our imitation of the Territorial system was an utter humbug and sham, and that it involved, moreover, a wide departure from the German system, inasmuch as in our muddle—a mixture of fright and fraud—we have introduced an element of confusion which the Germans have most carefully avoided. In the Order of Battle, every regiment of infantry is indicated by its number, the names or titles of the regiments, where there are any, being put in brackets,—"50th Infantry Brigade, General Major Von Wussow; Infantry Regiment (Prince Karl) No. 118, Infantry Regiment (Life) No. 117," and so on, many regiments having no names or titles at all, as "No. 32," "No. 80," "No. 83," "No. 94," &c. The German Army is a local force. It, indeed, is really localised, but at short notice it can be delocalised and fitted out with all the matériel, transport, &c., from the local stores, where all is kept in readiness for mobilisation. But intent as they were on their ridiculous pursuit of the substance which they ran to earth, and found to consist of a bundle of paper names, not one of the reformers at the War Office seems to have given the least heed to the vast differences in the conditions of the two armies. Not one man of this Territorial Army of Germany, so terribly efficient, is called on to leave his garrison or his home till war is declared, and till it is necessary to defend the country or to invade the enemy's. In fact, with an army raised by conscription such service as the British Army performs by men voluntarily enlisted could not possibly be rendered. No King or Kaiser in Fatherland now dare take the sons of the soil, and send them to carry arms to India, or the Cape, or distant isles, for years. By the system which is based on conscription, the soldier becomes for the time being so absolutely under command and control, that his officers can do as they please with him, under the terms and within the limits of a clearly-defined code; but he remains in his garrison or his village till the conditions of his service are changed by war. There is no need of doing this, or of undoing that, "to render the service popular." There is no necessity for letting soldiers run riot in the streets, or for allowing them to crowd the public-houses at night. Such outrages by the military as are not altogether uncommon in London and elsewhere, and are reported from the Police Courts, are seldom or never heard of in Germany. We must wink at so-called "music-halls," which are really Temples sacred to the Sisterhood whom the virginal votaries of the High Priests of the worship of Contagious Diseases delight to honour, and we must submit to have swarms of licensed public-houses in our garrison towns and to allow troglodytical institutions about our camps, lest "the service be made unpopular." In Homburg, with its large garrison, and with 30,000 men in a very narrow area around it, the Duke of Cambridge might remark there was not one straggling soldier to be seen after dark—none at all, except those on duty. Let a foreigner go to Westminster or Dublin, to Aldershot or the Curragh, and what will he see after dusk? Well, the price we pay for the difference is the preservation of our free-will, and the concession of many things to the recruit which are not unmixed blessings! And we must in this country buy the man's services on terms which he will take in the open market. When he is enlisted, he, if not pampered, must be petted a good deal. The German is taken whether he wills it or not, and serves under the conditions imposed by the State. The Duke of Cambridge, no doubt, observed that the Infantry carried great-coat, water-tin, canteen, and knapsack at the manœuvres, and that they bivouacked out in the rain night after night on the bare ground, with a bed of hay, if they were lucky. Now, we know what a storm would be raised about any luckless General's ears who made his men carry their knapsacks and all their fighting and marching kit, if one of them, overcome by debauchery, "gave out" and gave up the ghost at an Aldershot field-day! There was, we are told, one regiment his Royal Highness particularly remarked, which had come fourteen miles (from Offenbach) to the schauplatz, and were going back these fourteen miles more, after a hard morning's work, with one man footsore, marching steadily through the mud, as erect, alert, and cheerful at the close of seven days' manœuvres, as if they had just turned out.

There were, however, many things to be noticed at the manœuvres which were open to challenge. Our own Artillerymen, if they did not recollect that the Indian Artillery were as much for the pole as the Germans are, would be down on the pole-harness with unmeasured severity. Unquestionably, the leather-work, buckles, buttons, saddlery, &c., of the batteries and of the cavalry would not pass for one moment with even the slackest of inspecting officers in England, but then it must be remembered that the artillery and cavalry were very much the same in 1870 and 1871, and that the work they did defied criticism. In reviews, marching past, and manœuvres, mistakes will occur, as they do in war, and it is quite preposterous to suppose any General will direct the three arms at a field as he would if he were leading them in an action. The rifle bullet and the shell soon teach Commanders their distance, and give potent lessons in caution and range. The cavalry is not better than the horsemen who, thirteen years ago, covered the whole front of the German armies so completely that they never lost a man or a waggon by any sudden attack, from Sedan to Paris, and who, entering Versailles on September 19, swept round the great city so rapidly, and so kept it, that on the 20th not a soul could go in or out of it, except for those who went up in balloons. And that was good work, and was good enough test of fitness for it. The "bulk" of the men struck the observer. Their endurance is unquestionable. At the close of four or five hours' work the men never unbuttoned their tunics, but lay down by the road-side, with their knapsacks propping them, or sat up chatting and laughing, as fresh as daisies. The country abounded in apple orchards, and there was not a trace of damage to the trees. Perhaps the cavalrymen averaged but one and a-half years' service, and were young enough, and though a good English cavalry regiment would walk round one of theirs, it must not be inferred that the Germans would come out worse at the end of a campaign. The great error committed by critics of these manœuvres was that they forgot the circumstances in which the display took place, and that the presence of the Emperor, who likes to see the troops, modified the tactical arrangements considerably. Hence, advances and charges of cavalry under fire of an annihilating sort, and dispositions of infantry which could not be maintained in the field. The greatest "blot," perhaps, would be hit by the critic who commented on the want of connection between the cavalry and the troop artillery, and the deficiency of co-operation in the two arms in the offensive. But there it was, with all its blemishes, a machine most potent for every purpose for which an army could be needed, and leaving much for our most enthusiastic soldiers to imitate and emulate, if they could.

THE Grand Manœuvres of 1883 in France form the subject of an interesting article in the Avenir Militaire, from which we gather that, in a general point of view, the French Army, within the the last few years, has made a decided progress. However, a good deal remains to be done, and perfection has by no means been obtained. New tactics, it appears, have a great difficulty in making headway against routine, and a great many Generals of the old school obstinately refuse to recognise the necessity of adopting new methods to meet new and improved weapons. The Staffs of the various Army Corps, according to the Avenir, performed their duty in a satisfactory manner. The operations were well suited to the country in which the troops had to operate, the orders were clearly given, and the respective situation of the opposing forces well marked. However, we find that these orders were not always understood, and that errors beginning with the General increased in magnitude as they descended to the Captain. The Infantry, especially that of the 7th and 8th Army Corps, had long and difficult marches to accomplish, and yet it supported the fatigue in a creditable way; there were few stragglers, and not many sick. It is to be remarked, however, that the men did not carry their entire kit, and were more lightly burdened than they would be in time of war. The Avenir hopes that the various Generals will see to this next year, and insist upon the men having their knapsacks in regular campaigning order. Weighted as it was, the Infantry marched well, the columns maintaining order and discipline. It did not, however, protect itself sufficiently; it pushed forward when in the proximity of the enemy as if there were no hostile force within days of it. There was no waiting for information from cavalry scouts, patrols, or flank guards, which were too sparingly employed. Sometimes a patrol informed the officer in command that he could safely venture past a village or a wood a quarter of an hour after the village or wood had been cleared. The great object appeared to be to arrive at a given spot as rapidly as possible. When the troops went into cantonments, too, they were not properly protected, and this through a desire not to fatigue the troops by making them bivouac all night turn about. And yet, as the Avenir says, officers and men should be accustomed to support this hardship. In action, the Infantry gave proofs of superior qualities; movements were executed with rapidity, and no obstacle could interfere with the dash of the men, but they did not take sufficient advantage of the inequalities of the ground. This glaring fault the Avenir attributes to the chiefs, and especially to the subalterns; at the same time it propounds the opinion that it would not be advisable to tamper too much with the genius o the French soldier, which is to rush forward and to carry all before him. To teach him to get under cover would be to destroy his chief quality. The Avenir, however, admits that this system of neglecting shelter was carried a little too far, and says that it ought to be attended to at least to a reasonable extent. It was also remarked that the Infantry was ordered to charge before the enemy had been sufficiently hammered, and the consequence, in real warfare, would be that the first assault would in all probability be repulsed, and that this repulse would have a very demoralising influence. This would be especially the case with French troops, which are easily disheartened, from the fact that they believe themselves invincible, or only to be beaten by overwhelming odds on the side of the enemy, or treachery on their own. The Infantry is said to have advanced to the final assault with admirable vigour and agility, bounding over ploughed ground, scrambling through hedges, and escalading rocks at the end of a hard day's march, in a way which astonished all who saw them. The Avenir considers that the lines were too extended. Thus the Eighth Army Corps, during the battle of Braus, showed a front of over fifteen miles, which gave about one man for two yards. The Cavalry, says the Avenir, is an accessory to modern armies which, since 1870, has acquired so much importance, that "we can only deplore its inferiority as compared with other branches of the service." All the reports furnished to the Avenir agree that the Cavalry, with the exception of the Dragoons and Chasseurs attached to the Seventh and Eight Army Corps, which lie along the Prussian frontier, were found wanting. The Cavalry, we are told, has no idea of acting in concert with the other branches, especially with the Infantry. In the strictures passed upon the Cavalry, we think that we can perceive a slight tinge of professional jealousy, especially in regard to the independent divisions which manœuvre only in concert with horse artillery. As regards the Artillery and Engineers, the Avenir is lavish of its encomiums. The Artillery could not be handled with more rapidity and good judgment; it is calculated to inspire the utmost confidence. The Engineers, too, did their work with remarkable promptitude and intelligence. The French Captains are now mounted, for the French company on its war footing consists of 250 men. It is complained, however, that the horses which have been served out are most deplorable screws, that they all have more or less serious blemishes, and that none of them would be able to rough it for a week. "We know," says the Avenir, "regiments in which the officers have been obliged already to change their chargers twice, and as a general rule the third charger is worse than the first. We suppose the intention of the Government to be to supply the Infantry Captains with steady animals of a certain age, and not too great a price." It is to be regretted that during these manœuvres one officer should have been shot dead, and that a bullet whistled close to the ear of another. The officer who was killed was Major Sénaux, who was out with the skirmishers at the time, and there appears to be little doubt that his death was the result of a crime. The other officer fired at and missed by a young soldier was a Colonel Grisot, who appears to be a very strict disciplinarian. Some months ago, several officers in his regiment advertised in the Avenir (without giving their names) that they desired to effect an exchange. This was considered to be an act of insubordination. The culprits were called upon to give up their names, and were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. The Drapeau Noir, of Lyons, congratulates the soldier who shot Major Sénaux, assures him of its sympathy, and advises all the young soldiers to follow his example, in order that permanent armies may be suppressed. A Radical paper published in Paris compliments the would-be assassin of Colonel Grisot, and hopes that the bullet which passed so near him will be a warning to other officers. This is agreeable literature for the officers, who have to teach men discipline, and who do not expect to be murdered by their own countrymen in peace time.

If any member of the Mechanical Section of the British Association has had an hour's sleep since he heard Captain Bedford Pim's paper on the decadence of the British Navy, he must be a man who does not believe in the possibility of ruining the Empire, or who does not believe in Captain Bedford Pim. The real cause for anxiety lies in the uncertainty of our knowledge. The public do not know what to credit when they find such a conflict of authority as to the state of the Navy. Abstractedly, the Navy may be all Lord Northbrook, Sir T. Brassey, and Sir O. Trevelyan hold it to be; but it may, after all, be in as unsatisfactory a condition as Sir H. Lennox declares it is, when it is compared with possible Naval combinations and the outcome of present preparations. Now, would it not be well if the Admiralty condescended to allay public anxiety and to give an authoritative analysis of the state of the Navy in its relation to the Navies of the Great Powers? There is no harm in that. Anyone, of course, may study the Estimates and work out the subject, but he cannot be sure of his deductions. We know what the strength of the armies of the Great Powers are, and we know what we can do by land; but at sea, where it is essential to us to be safe from all possible combinations, we are left in the dark as to our comparative strength. For ourselves, we confess to some satisfaction in the thought that no English Government and no Board of Admiralty could for a moment endeavour to conceal the truth, if the Navy were indeed not capable of meeting any naval forces that could be possibly arrayed against it, but we admit that it would be satisfactory to have assurance made doubly sure.

The Admiralty left London on Friday evening for Sheerness, and were to inspect that dockyard to-day and Chatham Yard on Monday next. The inspection of the other yards will be arranged afterwards.

A report is in circulation that the Admiralty are dissatisfied with the result of the suspension of the Contagious Diseases Acts, and that a scheme to overcome some of the objections of Mr. Stansfeld's party will shortly come into operation; but the details have not yet been elaborated. We trust that their Lordships will be successful in combatting the injudicious efforts of those who are totally ignorant of the immense advantages of these Acts and their value to the seamen of our Fleet. The opinions already expressed on this subject by the Earl of Northbrook are an assurance that it will not be approached in a lukewarm spirit.

We are requested to state that neither Lieutenant F. H. Wilson nor Lieutenant Watson, R.M.L.I., was implicated in the practical joke for which certain officers were tried and reprimanded by sentence of court-martial at Chatham.

In reply to the query, "Why it is that, with so many disadvantages, there are men willing to accept them in the Coastguard service?" a correspondent writes:—"In the first place, men join the service under very mistaken ideas. It is erroneously reputed to be a service in which the duties are light, not involving much danger to life, and in many cases of a nominal character. A few months' experience in the service soon dispels these delusive ideas. There is then no remedy but to serve on, as, previous to joining, the Admiralty wisely requires every man to re-engage for a period of ten years. If candidates are plentiful, why is it that men who are dissatisfied with the service are not permitted to go afloat again? Some time ago the Coastguard service was several hundred men short, and sufficient candidates possessing the necessary qualifications to fill the vacancies could not be obtained. A question was put in the House of Commons concerning the deficiency of men in the Coastguard, when, to meet the emergency, the nominal strength of the force was reduced by 500 men, so that the Secretary to the Admiralty could say that the force was only short a few men. Even with this deduction in the numerical strength of the force, it was found necessary to reduce the sea-time required to qualify men for the service from ten to eight years. Besides this, it is only men whose qualifications are not sufficient to insure them advancement afloat that join. Men of ability will not enter the service, except a few who may be through some injuries rendered partly unfit for active service afloat."

The total number of vessels the Russian Admiralty has approved the construction of since the beginning of the year is seven,—four ironclads of an improved Inflexible type in the Black Sea, a fifth, still more powerful, assigned last week to the Baltic works on the Neva, and two cruisers to be built on the same river by a French company. The particulars of the new ironclad have not yet transpired. As regards the cruisers, they will be vessels of 2,950 tons displacement, 265 ft. long, 45 broad, and 16 deep. Their engines will be of 3,500 horse-power indicated, with an average speed of 15 knots an hour. The armament will comprise six 6-in. guns disposed on the upper deck, four 9-pounders, and six Hotchkiss machine-guns. The hulls will be of steel, sheathed with wood and copper. The crew will consist of 400 men. Each cruiser will cost £125,000 sterling, and both will be supervised to Captain Leontieff, who controlled the building of the Peter the Great.

The Admiralty have directed that chief and other warrant officers who may have been granted good-conduct medals previous to receiving their warrants are to wear them.

While the Commander-in-Chief of the East Indies station is at Zanzibar, he will, by direction of the Admiralty, inspect the London, and report on her present condition. The abolition of the depôt ship at that place has been under consideration for some time. Considering the necessity for retaining vessels-of-war on the East Coast, and the distance from any depôt, the advantages of a stationary ship at Zanzibar are unquestionable, more especially for the medical treatment of patients. As the substitution of an iron for a wooden vessel has proved advantageous at Jamaica, we see no reason why a similar course should not be adopted at Zanzibar. But she should be large enough to admit of greater accommodation, especially of fever patients.

The navigation season is rapidly coming to a close in the Gulf of Finland, and this week the Russian Naval authorities have commenced disbanding the Baltic Fleet, and making the vessels snug at Cronstadt for the winter. The new frigate Vladimir Monomarchies, which arrived at Cronstadt in the summer from the Neva, is nearly finished, and her engines will be tested on the measured mile next week. Every effort is to be made to send the frigate to the Mediterranean before winter sets in. An order has been received from the St. Petersburg Admiralty that the gunboat Sturgeon, built in 1855, is to be handed over to the torpedo authorities, to be employed in testing the effects of the new Whitehead torpedoes manufactured during the summer at Cronstadt.

Captain W. H. Maxwell, of the Neptune, has sufficiently recovered from his recent illness to be able to resume the command of the ship.

The Crown Prince of Portugal, whilst in Germany, complied with an invitation received from the principal shipbuilding firms, makers of war material, &c., to visit their establishments. Portugal is at present in the market as a purchaser for ships and guns. The sums voted are,—250 millions of reis, as half cost of one corvette and two gunboats, 40 millions for the purchase of machinery for the arsenal, and 62 millions for the purchase of heavy guns for the Navy.

Major and Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Holmes, R.M.L.I., having been promoted to the substantive rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, the recruiting station at Liverpool became vacant. This appointment has invariably been given to a full Major, namely, one on the 16s. a day list, so candidates sent in their names, and it was generally supposed that the senior applicant would receive the coveted billet. Every one was surprised, however, when it became known that none of the applicants had secured the prize, which, it soon transpired, had been bestowed upon a junior Major, one on the 13s. 7d. a day list. But this officer had not passed for the rank of Major, and this fact, we presume, was known at the Admiralty when they gave him the appointment which, of itself, precluded his going up for the examination. He has now been reduced to the rank of Captain, "for failing to pass" the examination his duties precluded him from going up for. He still holds the appointment, and the authorities do not know what to do with him, for the senior Majors are clamouring for the billet, which they claim to be theirs by right, being the best in the service. The only course for the Admiralty to pursue is to allow the officer to pass the military examination, promote him to the substantive rank, and continue him in his appointment. The action taken by the Admiralty will, no doubt, have the effect of putting all officers who are preparing for their next grade on the qui vive. In the present instance, the officers whose promotions have been cancelled have been compelled to revert to their former rank on the list of captains, one losing 22 and the other 12 steps in a seniority corps, not from having failed to pass, but from having been placed in such a position, in one case, by the Admiralty, as to prevent the officer in question even going up to be examined. We do not doubt, however, but that the matter will be set right.

We understand that in the event of a rupture between France and Germany, nearly all the Russian men-of-war on foreign service will make for the Pacific, so as to enable Russia to have on the spot a powerful squadron. At present, Russia has in the Pacific the frigate Duke of Edinburgh and the corvette Skobeleff, both new vessels. The clipper Razboinik was last spoken off Monte Video, on her way to join them. The frigate Minin is also proceeding to the Pacific, by way of Suez, and should circumstances require it, would be followed by the frigate Svetlana and corvette Bayan, at present in the Mediterranean, and the new frigate Vladimir Monomarchies, under orders to proceed thither from Cronstadt when complete.

The Royal Marine Light Infantry Division, at Chatham, and the Marine Artillery, at Eastney, having been supplied with Nordenfelt machine-guns, the Plymouth Division likewise applied for a gun for their battery. General Adair, however, has been succeeded at the office in Spring Gardens by a Royal Marine Artillery man, who appears to consider machine-gun drill to be no part of the instruction to be imparted to a Royal Marine Light Infantry man. He has, therefore, ordered the Infantry to return their machine-guns into store.

The case of Lieutenant Conway-Gordon, originally brought forward in these columns, is receiving the attention it deserves from the London and provincial Press.

The semi-official Cronstadt Vestnik, the organ of the Russian Baltic Fleet, in discussing in a leader this week the operations of Admiral Pierre off the coast of Madagascar, expresses great sympathy at the "melancholy fate of that officer," declaring him to be the "victim of the intrigues of English missionaries and Naval authorities." Commander Johnstone it strongly censures, for his "hostile attitude" and "unwarrantable high-handedness." As for some time past the Russian semi-official press has been encouraging the idea of a Franco-Russian alliance, defensive and offensive, these opinions cannot be regarded as wholly disinterested and unbiassed.

Admiral Acton has directed the Italia to be armed with four 100-ton Armstrong guns as soon as her Cammell compound armour-plates shall have been fixed. The Italia will also carry eleven 15-ton guns and six 7½-ton guns; twelve Nordenfelt shell-firing machine-guns, with 5,000 rounds of ammunition for each gun; four rifle-calibre Nordenfelt machine-guns, with 8,000 rounds of ball cartridge for each; four torpedo-tubes, and 24 Whitehead torpedoes; 20 towing-torpedoes, and two second-class torpedoes; 400 rifles and sword-bayonets, with 500 rounds of ammunition for each; 200 revolvers, with 100 rounds of ball cartridge for each revolver; five photo-electric apparati of the force of 1,600 Carcel lamps each, and two of 200 Carcel lamps each, for boat use.

The Admiralty have decided that black or coloured men are not to be entered for service in the Navy, without the special sanction of the Admiralty.

The American Navy Department has at last made up its mind as to the necessity of adding new and improved cruisers to the Navy of the United States, and has decided on adopting three new types of vessels for this purpose. The Chicago class is to be of the following dimensions:—Length on water-line, 325 ft.; beam, 48 ft. 2 in.; draught, 19 ft.; displacement, 4,500 tons. Their armament will consist of four 8-in. B.L.R., eight 6-in. B.L.R., two 5-in. B.L.R., and six machine guns. These vessels will be barque-rigged, with a sail area of 14,880 square feet, with two funnels. The engines will work twin screws, and be of sufficient power to attain a speed of over 15 knots. The hull and decks will be partially protected by light steel armour. The coal supply will be about 1,240 tons, which will enable this class, of which the Chicago is the experimental ship, to steam 3,000 miles at full speed, or 6,000 miles at from 10 to 11 knots an hour. The Atlanta and Boston are types of the second-class cruisers. These will be brig-rigged to top-gallant sails, with 10,400 square feet spread of canvas, and of the following dimensions:—Length, 270 ft.; breadth, 42 ft.; draught, 17 ft.; and displacement, 3,000 tons. The armament will be two 8-in. B.L.R.; six 6-in. B.L.R., and eight machine-guns. The 8-in. guns will be mounted in barbette towers in échelon, one on the port side before the foremast, one on the starboard side abaft the mainmast. The battery is raised above the bulwarks, like the deck-house of a mail steamer, which, with their two funnels, these craft will much resemble. The engines will be of 3,500 indicated horse-power, calculated to obtain a speed of 14 knots an hour. The Dolphin is a despatch-boat, intended for high speed. She will be a three-masted schooner, with single funnel, of the following dimensions:—Length, 240 ft.; breadth, 32 ft.; and displacement, 1,500 tons. Her armament will be light, consisting of a 6-in. B.L.R., and four 47-mm. Hotchkiss revolving cannon, mounted at the extremity of each bridge in armoured towers. We intend giving a more detailed description of these vessels on a future occasion, as their internal arrangements seem to us as likely to be of interest to our naval readers.

Mr. Shaw, of the London Missionary Society, has given a narrative of his experiences. The question is, did he, by his manner and general behaviour, provoke the action of the French Commander-in-Chief, or not? According to his own statement, he certainly did not, and Admiral Pierre tacitily admitted he was wrong in his violent and very tyrannical treatment of Mr. Shaw. He should have said so openly. An American who interviewed Mr. Shaw after his release, says:—"The much-talked-of Missionary is a man of 45 or 46, below middle height, spare, dark, and be-spectacled, and he wears his black beard and moustache after the fashion of a typical American. Mr. Shaw, who is a Congregationalist, strikes one as being a self-made man. He is, perhaps, less Evangelical by nature than energetic, and I am inclined to think, after a careful examination of his facial peculiarities, that he might have some difficulty in keeping his temper under provocation, still more in keeping quiet if he fancied anything was to be effected by agitation." The description given of Mr. Shaw may apply generally to many Missionaries. There are exceptions. They would ram Christianity down the throats of the Aborigines at the point of the bayonet, if they could; and many a time have her Majesty's ships in the Pacific, under the pretence of retributive justice, had to punish tribes for offences against Missionaries brought on solely by their being men "less Evangelical by nature than energetic, who have some difficulty in keeping their temper under provocation, and still more in keeping quiet when they fancy anything is to be effected by agitation." We have heard Mr. Shaw's ex parte statement, and now wait the explanation of the other side; but we must at once declare that nothing can extenuate the behaviour of the French Admiral but the clearest proof that Mr. Shaw deserved to be ill-treated, and as no such proof is adduced, our Government must protect our fellow-subject, and obtain ample reparation. Mr. Shaw may be consoled by French gold, but our national interests and honour demand moral satisfaction, such as a confession of error and an expression of regret. As to the firing on the town and sensation "hits," which provoked cries of "shame!" and the like, we must remember that Exeter Hall is a very peculiar place, and that the same sounds have been heard there when our own officers have been assailed for acts which missionaries did not approve of.

The Bittern has, by the "Movements of Ships" issued from the Admiralty, been transferred from the Mediterranean to the West African station.

There has been much angry writing in the French Press on the subject of the King of Spain, and it was certainly not wise on the part of his Majesty to accept the colonelcy of a Uhlan regiment on the eve of visiting Paris. King Alphonso resided for a long time in exile in France, and must be well aware of the peculiarly sensitive and suspicious character of the inhabitants, who, ever since the Franco-German War, have looked upon the very name of "Uhlan" as all that is bad, and as all civilised Europe once regarded "the whiskered Pandour and the fierce Hussar." The Radical journals have recommended a hostile demonstration, just to show Monsieur Alphonse that the Republic is not to be insulted with impunity, overlooking the fact that the visit of the King of Spain is a proof of good-will towards the nation and a mark of respect. The French official papers appear to be anxious on the subject, and are trying to smooth matters down, and, by way of apology, the matter is laid at the door of Prince Bismarck, who is roundly accused of wishing to make mischief between two Latin countries. The French are, of course, wrong to prendre la mouche so easily; but "it is their nature to."

Some queer stories are related with regard to the recent examination for promotion. One officer was "spun," we believe, because he showed up the absurdity of some of the ideas of the standard text-books.

In the winter of 1844-45, the Sikhs crossed the Sutlej, and invaded British India. A small army was rapidly concentrated in front of Umballa, and hurried by forced marches to meet the Sikh army, which had been drilled by French and Italian officers, regularly organised and armed in European fashion, and possessed a powerful and well-equipped artillery. Four severe and sanguinary battles were fought, at Moodkee, Ferozeshah, Aliwal, and Sobraon. Both armies suffered very heavy losses, and at the final fight at Sobraon the Sikhs were defeated and driven over and into the Sutlej, with a loss of 10,000 men. In these four battles, the 31st Regiment took a distinguished part. The regiment started from Umballa with 30 officers and 844 non-commissioned officers and men, of whom 26 officers and 529 men were killed and wounded; 11 officers and 144 soldiers were killed in the four battles. Here is a glorious record of splendid fighting in real battles! The Expeditionary Army to Egypt, a corps d'armée, did not lose as many killed and wounded as the 31st Regiment alone.

The letters which reach us from medical officers place beyond doubt the fact that there are Army doctors who aspire to military rank and command, and a much stronger section, which is satisfied to continue the useful work for which a military medical man is specially trained at Netley. One correspondent, who may fairly claim to be a representative officer, writes us a long letter, in which he begs us to "continue the campaign against the would-be combatant doctor—as if a doctor could possibly be constituted a combatant, so long as there remain any combatants to do combatant work."

It is said that General Schmitz, who is at present in command of the 9th Army Corps, is going to succeed Admiral Jaurèz as French Ambassador to the Court of St. Petersburg. This post is always held by an officer of the highest rank.

Matters appear to be pretty quiet for the French in North Africa just now, and no new rising is said to be apprehended. However, General Saussier, who is in command of the 19th Army Corps, which holds Algeria, has called the attention of the Home Government to the presence of Bou Amema, the principal chief of the late insurrection, at Figuig, not far from the frontier. The General has asked the Government to call upon the Emperor of Morocco to insist upon Bou Amema residing in some town on the Atlantic.

The 3rd Battalion, Rifle Brigade, at Aldershot, must present just now rather a mongrel appearance on parade, if the 400 odds and ends left behind with it at Aldershot on the departure of the 87th for India are paraded with it for drill purposes. The Rifle Brigade are, of course, in a dark uniform, the 87th in scarlet. It is difficult to understand why the Rifles were selected in this instance to "discipline" the Fusilier contingent. The arrangement certainly does appear a miserable one which renders it necessary for a battalion of juveniles to remain at home whenever a regiment proceeds on service. It was only last year that the 87th, when despatched to Egypt, left behind them at Aldershot 450 men. Now the same process of weeding has had to be gone through again. Fortunately, the present system of organisation has conferred one benefit on the Army, by creating an amount of mutual sympathy among officers and men which never existed before, as nobody knows how soon he may be in the same plight as he finds others; but it must put the machinery of a regiment to the severest possible test, when it is suddenly called upon to "discipline" some 400 or 500 young soldiers, who are thrust upon it with no officers and few experienced non-commissioned officers to assist in keeping them within bounds.

It has been the general impression that General Brialmont had to retire from active service because he went to Roumania, to advise the Government of that country on the important question of national defence, against the wishes of his own Government. But the real motive was, according to the Belgique Militaire, that General Brialmont published a work, about two years ago, which proved that the War Minister, General Gratry, did not know anything about strategy and fortifications. It was unpardonable to defend the interests of the Army without fear, and to use plain language towards the Premier and his obedient War Minister.

The Ordnance Corps have every reason to be satisfied with the result of the recent examination for entrance to the Staff College. Altogether, fifteen of their candidates succeeded in getting the necessary number of marks, and although vacancies could only be found for five, owing to the rule which precludes more than three artillerymen and two engineers passing into the College in any one year, it nevertheless speaks well for the two corps that so many of their men should go up for an examination which entails a great deal of close application beforehand. The first six places on the list are filled by representatives of the Ordnance Corps, the first and second men—Lieutenant J. M. Grierson and Captain H. C. C. Walker—being from the Artillery, and the third, fourth, and fifth—Lieutenants H. J. Foster, J. B. Sharpe, and E. Agar—from the Engineers. The Cavalry in the examination passed six of its men, though only four—viz., Captain Wyndham, 21st Hussars, Hon. J. P. Napier, 10th Hussars, Paget, 7th Hussars, and Hon. E. Vesey, 9th Lancers—can be admitted. The Indian Staff Corps was represented by seven candidates, viz., Captain H. E. Penton, Bombay S.C. (seventh place); Lieutenant J. W. Hogge, Bengal S.C.; Lieutenant A. G. A. Durand, Bengal S.C.; Captain F. W. Snell, Bombay S.C.; Lieutenant F. C. Maisey, Bengal S.C.; Captain J. L. Aberigh-Mackay, Bengal S.C.; and Captain G. F. W. MacMahon, Bombay S.C., of whom the three first-named are admitted. The Marines this year sent up only one officer apparently, Captain W. T. Adair, R.M.L.I., who has succeeded in obtaining a pretty high position (ninth) on the list. The Infantry is represented by eighteen successful candidates, of whom ten will join at Sandhurst in February next. The highest number of marks obtained this year is 2,981; the lowest of the successful candidates secured 1,796, whilst the lowest of those who qualified, but have been put back for want of vacancies, has 1,557 to his credit. Taken as a whole, the list may be regarded as a fairly satisfactory one, giving evidence as it does that, notwithstanding the oft-expressed opinion that the course of study is rather too theoretical, the officers of the Army, especially in the more scientific branches, appreciate the means which are thus afforded them of showing their interest in their profession. There may be doubts as to the soundness of the present system of instruction at the Staff College, but there can exist no two opinions that some such institution as the College is necessary in these days.

We pointed out, when the new Musketry Regulations appeared, the objections to the rule which precludes serjeants from the possibility of earning the distinctions awarded to battalion and company best shots. As an example of the way in which the rule works in practice, we will quote the case of the —— Regiment:—During the annual course of musketry, a colour-serjeant made 252 points in class firing, and 60 points (highest possible score) in A and B practices, making the splendid total of 312 points. For this he has received £1 and worsted cross rifles, that being all that is allowed him according to the terms of the General Order. A private who has not scored within 20 or 30 points of him has, however, received £5, the gold cross rifles and crown, and the title of "best shot of the battalion," which is at the least a misnomer. Another serjeant made 253 points in class-firing and 51 points in A and B practices—total, 304 points—and in like manner is prevented from being "best shot" in his company, as also are two or three other serjeants in their respective companies. This treatment of serjeants does not appear calculated to serve the best interests of the Army, especially as no reasons have ever been assigned by any one for their being excluded from a competition their success in which could produce none but the most beneficial results.

In the evidence given before the Commission appointed to inquire into the organisation of the Army Medical Department in Egypt which appears in a Parliamentary Blue-book, there are statements regarding Cyprus, viz.—that it has a "pestilential climate," that "the place is hotter and more unhealthy than Egypt," that it is "not a fit place to send invalids to, or in which to form a sanitarium," &c., on the authority of Lord Wolseley, who, in 1878, at the time of the occupation of Cyprus, was appointed High Commissioner and Commander-in-Chief of the Island. Why, then, in the face of such statements, should Cyprus be a "five years' station?" We believe the authorities have already determined upon making the Island a three years' station for all men employed departmentally as bakers and butchers; but why not extend the privilege to all ranks?

Notwithstanding the absence of Cavalry—the only element necessary to give completeness to the work—the manœuvres carried out yesterday (Friday) at Wimbledon were even more interesting than on the 14th inst., when it will be remembered some of the troops went on to the scene of action without ammunition! The idea was as follows:—"The convoy and troops succeeded in effecting a retreat from Wimbledon. The officer in charge of the convoy reports to the Brigadier commanding at Kingston that a small force of the enemy is in possession of the range of heights extending from Wimbledon town, by Cæsar's Camp, to Roehampton. So long as this position is held by the enemy, it is not possible to repair the line of rail from Kingston to Wimbledon. The Brigadier at Kingston sends forward next morning the only troops at his disposal to regain the heights and Wimbledon, viz., two guns and four weak battalions of Infantry of five companies each (this force is represented by two guns, Royal Horse Artillery, from St. John's Wood, a party of the 2nd Grenadier Guards, 1st Coldstream Guards, Depôt 31st Regimental District, and a detachment of the King's Royal Rifles). The enemy's force consists of two guns, Royal Horse Artillery, and the 1st and 3rd Battalions, Grenadier Guards, under the command of Colonel Davies." Fighting commenced shortly before 11 o'clock, and lasted till noon, both commanders displaying excellent tactics. Colonel Fitzroy made a feint near Beverley, but developed the attack near Wimbledon Green, where Colonel Davies was ready for him. A stubborn fight resulted, as far as could be learnt, in favour of Colonel Davies.

The Emperor of Germany has named the King of Spain Colonel of the 15th Ulanen (Lancers) Regiment, and his Majesty's nomination may be expected to appear in the Official Gazette presently.

The nomination of Field-Marshal H.R.H. the Prince of Wales to the Colonelcy of the Blucher Hussars, gives expression to the feelings with which the traditions of the time when German and British Armies fought side by side under an English General are still regarded at Berlin; but there is not any political significance in the act, and the position is purely honorary. The Prince of Wales wears the beautiful uniform of the regiment (blut-roth, an amyrinth or cramoisie pelisse and tunic, very richly trimmed with fur and silver lace, &c.,) when in Germany on State occasions, and at military displays where the Emperor is present, and has certain rights in connection with the regiment, but that is all.

At the close of the manœuvres of the Eleventh Corps d'Armée, on Wednesday last, after the usual "officers' call," the Emperor, who on such occasions generally makes a few remarks on each day's operations, addressed General Von Schlottheim in warm terms of praise, and then went on to refer to what he had seen that day of his son's favourite corps:—"He was satisfied,—to officers and men for what they had done he gave his thanks, as the country had thanked them for their services in time past!" Then his Majesty raised his voice, which had been half choked with emotion, "to bid them all adieu—his last adieu—he saw them all for the last time!" Many of the veterans were moved to tears. There was a tremendous "Hoch!" as the Emperor turned to leave, and his course through the troops was one long ovation.

A correspondent writes:—"It is reported in German Military circles that another Krupp gun has been added to the list of those which have burst during the present year. And it has transpired that the gun in question was a 15-centimètre of the latest design. This is the third which is known to have burst within the last ten months, the others being a 28-centimètre at Fort Heppens, near Wilhelmshaven, and a 35-centimètre at Cronstadt."

The Germans have heard with wonder that the War Office decided against the system of regimental transport. They do not understand our War Office.

It is very flattering, of course, to find our "Society" contemporaries reproducing, week after week, all the news which have appeared in our columns. But we cannot help suggesting to them that it would be more honest if the source from which these paragraphs are obtained was acknowledged. We are quite used to the dishonesty of the daily (London and provincial) papers in this respect. The "Society" journals are, however, so very thin-skinned, and are so jealous of their reputations for early and authentic information, that we should have expected them to have been a little more sensible of what is due to others.

The manœuvres of the Fourth Corps, under Count Von Blumenthal, at Merseburg, were attended by several correspondents of English newspapers, who were treated with every attention and consideration by the General and Staff of the corps d'armée, were provided with free passes, and invited to functions, &c., in a very liberal manner. When the accounts of these gentlemen, or of some of them, arrived in Germany, it was found that they were not only very severe and unfriendly, but that they were, so the Germans maintain, ridiculous as criticisms and inaccurate as descriptions, and the result was that the General of the Eleventh Corps d'Armée, at Homburg, General Von Schlottheim, resolved to give no facilities whatever to English correspondents. The latter, of course, refused to remain, and it seems to us that the refusal of the General to grant passes, or to furnish them with "the general idea," or plans and maps, deprived them of all raison d'être at the manœuvres, and merely left them the use of their literary teeth. Perhaps it would be more judicious if correspondents at foreign manœuvres did not assume the functions of an umpire staff or reviewing general. They might, at all events, reserve their strictures till the manœuvres were over, and till they were back in their own country; but even then they should remember that they had been received as friends. They will find it very hard work to kick against the pricks, where the latter are bayonets. It is easy to refrain from praise,—and that, under the circumstances, would be well understood.

When twenty Paymasters were promoted about two years ago, the principle of selection was applied, to the detriment of nine officers who were superseded. Four of these nine have been promoted, after respectively five, six, nine, and twenty-two months' service subsequent to the big gazette. One went on half-pay, two retired, one has been cashiered, and one remains still on the lower rung of the ladder. It does seem to the non-official mind somewhat capricious to treat men of mature age and considerable service like naughty children, to be put in the corner for a few minutes (months), and then restored to favour,—by promotion. We quite concede that financial officers must be prepared to submit to the principle. Of the four officers who were passed over last July, the qualifications of one, Major W. S. Thorpe, are acknowledged by the authorities and throughout the Department. His merits are known, his ability has been proved, both at home and abroad, in the actual duties he would be called upon to perform as a Chief Paymaster, and he has long and efficient service, all the qualifications demanded by the Regulations. As there is no immediate expectation of any step arising among the Chief Paymasters before next year, we trust that this officer's claims will be reconsidered.

The British Navy. Vol. V. (Longmans and Co.)

The fifth volume of Sir Thomas Brassey's work on the British Navy seems to be the concluding one, but, nevertheless, not the least interesting. So far back as 1877 the present volume first appeared, under the title of "British Seamen," and it is thought by the author that the Merchant Service, regarded as our main resource for the reinforcement of the Navy, falls within the scope of a general review of Naval affairs, and also that a republication of the author's work forms an appropriate conclusion to a series of papers on the British Navy. Sir Thomas Brassey does not for a moment claim the merit of originality for the opinions and suggestions set forth in this volume. It is, no doubt, mainly a compilation from the published testimony of authorities, whether in maritime, commercial, or official spheres. As the author observes, in this consists a considerable portion of its use and value. No one, however, can question the practical value of such a compilation as that which he has prepared. Thoroughly alive to the importance of the subject he treats, and rendered by experience aware of its difficulty, he has long since proved himself to be exceptionally well qualified to perform the task he is accomplishing. Many readers of works do not always form a just opinion as to the value, or perhaps even the meaning, of a "compilation." The value of that species of literature must depend upon the careful study and sound judgment with which the compiler makes his extracts and selections. To select with judgment is often more difficult than to compose original matter, and entails far more wearisome trouble. The first chapter in Sir T. Brassey's present volume affords an example of the use and value of compilation. Its subject is a most important one, "Has the British Seaman Degenerated?" Several witnesses were examined before the Commission on Unseaworthy Ships, and they spoke strongly on the deterioration of our seamen, and very striking evidence in support of this case was furnished by the Committee of Shipowners formed in Liverpool in 1870. A vast amount of evidence was taken on these inquiries, and a careful selection made of what was valuable and what was not. In such a case as this, it would be difficult to over-estimate the advantages of being a careful and impartial compiler. The fifth volume is divided into 16 parts or chapters, which involves most important questions as to "Whether the British Seamen is Deteriorated or Not," "The Present Condition of Our Seamen," "The Annual Waste of Seamen in the Merchant Service," "Apprentices," "Existing Training-ships," "Recruiting for Training-ships," "Age of Admission for Boys," "The Training System, and who is to Pay for It?" "Plans for Training Seamen," "Government Training-ships," "Apprenticeship for the Naval Reserve," "Desertion," "Wages of Seamen," "The Advance Note," "Pensions for Seamen," and "Sir Thomas Brassey's Speech on the Pension Fund for Seamen: delivered in the House of Commons on March 10, 1876; reprinted from 'Hansard.'" All these chapters embrace important subjects, and no matter whether they are sniffed at for being "compilations" or not, they present a valuable book of reference in close connection with the British Navy.

We have great pleasure in publishing the following very candid and useful letter, and admit that our correspondent makes out a very good case for our representative riflemen. The moral of it all is that "the Belgians and Tireurs Etrangers shoot very well indeed," and Belgian conditions are as much against the Etrangers as our own would be against Belgians, and both are artificial.

THE BRUSSELS TIR NATIONAL.

Sir,—My attention has only to-day been directed to the paragraph in your last number on this subject. In justice to my comrades, kindly permit me to explain that English shooting men attending the Brussels Tir were heavily handicapped, because there were not more than a dozen who competed at all, and of these only two were habitual attendants at Brussels. The Belgians always shoot under cover, the English in the open air. The Belgians never shoot in any other position except from the shoulder. The English hardly ever fire a shot at the shoulder. The Belgians only shoot at two distances,—109 and 250 yards. The English shoot at all distances, up to 1,000 yards. The Belgians shoot at black targets, with white bull's-eyes; the English at white targets, and black bull's-eyes. The English shoot with military rifles, principally the Martini-Henry, having a 7-lb. pull; but many of the competitors in the open competitions fired with heavy rifles, with bead foresights, very light pull of trigger, light charge of powder, and no recoil,—weapons made on purpose for gallery shooting, and totally unfitted for service in the field, and somewhat facetiously termed "armes de guerre;" hence the English representatives had to encounter novel conditions, to say nothing of the overwhelming hospitality of our generous hosts. You say that "to be 9th, 11th, 21st, and 45th in the list of prizes is not any great thing," but considering that this particular series was open to weapons of the description I have mentioned, and there were no less than 1,222 competitors, I submit that the English contingent, who all of them used military rifles, did not do so badly when they secured four out of 51 prizes. You also remark that, "In one pool, a Volunteer won the 44th prize, with a score of 23, out of a possible 25. We cannot understand exactly what the 43 gentlemen before him did." Well, they did better; for five of them made the "maximum" score of 25, twelve of them one point less, 24, and the remainder also 23, but scores that counted better according to the rule for settling ties with a better "barrage," as it is called, the bull's-eye being a circle of four inches in diameter, the distance 100 mètres, and the weapon the antiquated rifled musket of the days of Waterloo. This is a simple proof of the odds against which our men had to contend, for the Belgians and Tireurs Etrangers—and there were at least some 3,500 of them, all told—shoot very well, indeed, under the peculiar conditions that obtain at Brussels.—I am, Sir, &c.,

Sept. 27 C. Fredk. Lowe.

Sir,—I have read with much interest the letter on "Our Boys," in the last Army and Navy Gazette, and having also carefully perused the many valuable suggestions contained in letters which have lately appeared in the Daily Telegraph on the same subject, I have come to the conclusion that if those interested in the formation of a Naval and Military Co-operative Emigration Society would take up the matter in a vigorous and practical manner, the scheme would prove a great success, and be an immense boon to a very large number of poor officers who have sons and daughters to provide for. I would particularly point out that the committee should be empowered only to assist such candidates who have prepared themselves beforehand in the different branches requisite for an emigrant's life, as enumerated in Gen. Bray's letter.—I am, &c., Lieutenant-Colonel.

Havelock-Allan, C.B., V.C., and Spurgin, C.B.; Major-Gens. Willis, C.B., and Sir C. Palliser, K.C.B.; Cols. Barker, Bouverie, Maitland, R.A., Blake, Battine, Macbean, Lynch, Shute, Hall, and Cleland; Majors Findlay, Woolhouse, Johnson, and Swettenham; Capt. Phipps; and Dr. J. Jee, C.B., V.C.

THE GERMAN MANŒUVRES.

"The Emperor wore General's full-dress uniform on gala days, and ordinary uniform every other day. He never appeared in plain-clothes, at Court, in camp, or in the city. He sits his horse perfectly erect, with a military seat, and gallops over the plough with his Staff like the youngest of them. He criticises defects very strictly, but always makes allowances for the difference between real and sham.

"The Duke of Cambridge has been very well received by the German Princes with scarcely an exception, and by all the German officers. He rode one of the Emperor's horses—a steady and powerful charger—at the manœuvres, and on gala days wore the yellow riband of the Black Eagle. His Royal Highness was observed to be in close confab. with Count Von Moltke on several occasions, and it is said by the German officers that the Duke's criticisms are exceedingly just and searching.

"The Prince of Wales took an active interest in the manœuvres, and followed them each day to the end. The Prince generally wore the Blucher Hussar uniform. He was splendidly mounted, on one of the best horses of the Imperial stud. The Crown Princess of Germany and Princess Victoria always went with the Emperor and the Imperial and Royal Staff, on horseback. Her Royal Highness wore the nearest approach that could be contrived to the uniform of her regiment, and was well carried by a spirited Irish charger. The Queen of England's eldest daughter is known to hate war, but she is not by any means indifferent to the efficiency of the best way of preserving peace. Nevertheless, no one would be happier than the Princess, if all armies could be disbanded to-morrow. The Crown Prince looks more robust, if possible, than he was when he commanded the army in France, and his Imperial Highness took special interest in these manœuvres, as the 11th Corps was under him in 1870-1871, and all the senior officers have risen under his eye. His old Chief of the Staff, Blumenthal, now Governor of Magdeburg and Commander of the Fourth Corps, lately created a Count of the Empire, was in attendance on the King of Saxony, against whom he fought at Sadowa in 1866, when his Majesty as Crown Prince commanded the Saxon Army, then allied with Austria, now the Twelfth Corps d'Armée. The General is much pleased with his new honour, as it is a restoration to the old rank of the family. The King of Spain seems much aged, and might be taken for 30 or more. His face has 'hardened,' and has lost the free, bright look it bore when he was a Woolwich cadet, but he is as gay as a lark,y and ver bold and outspoken, with plenty of 'go' and confidence in him, and he rides ventre à terre when he has a chance. His Majesty of Servia has a bold, determined look, and keeps a sharp eye on the situation all round. He is understood to be anxious for support against the hugs of the Great Bear. The French General Launay and his officers have a difficult part to play, but they bear themselves with great propriety and good-taste. Our English uniforms do not look brilliant, amid the foreign Staff 'coruscations.' The white cocks' feathers which decorate our Generals' cocked hats are associated in these parts with the head-gear of jägers and couriers, and our lace is certainly less showy than the Staff lace, silver or gold, abroad. But 'Sam Browne,' with his empty sleeve, his bemedalled breast, and his soldierly face and form, attracts attention everywhere. Colonel Keith Fraser, in the Life Guards uniform, is one of the most striking figures on the field, and there are few finer types of a soldier in any army than he and Colonel Teesdale. There are plenty of scarlet and red uniforms in addition to our own. The Chinese officer, who is very active, is said to be most amusing and intelligent. He speaks French and German very well. His uniform is eccentric, according to our notions, but it would be just as fight to fignt in as some of the others. Most of the foreign officers are lodged at Ritter's, and have a very cosmopolitan mess. The Turk Mouktar Gazi and Kachler seem highly pleased, and do not object to meet the Ruski at the social board, and the great prop of the Ottoman Empire in the field has burst into French verses in ladies' albums. Amongst the German Staff, the prospects of war with Russia are freely discussed; but they all disclaim any hostile intentions, though they are convinced Russia entertains them against Germany. An immense sensation was made among a group of English ladies at the Schloss the other night, by the appearance in their midst of a warrior in gold-braided cocked hat, scarlet tunic slashed and braided with gold lace, breast like a jeweller's front window, white tops and grand Napoleon boots, whom a Member of Parliament identified as 'the War Minister.' It was only the Oberstahlmeister!"

The instruction in field cooking, recently ordered to form part of "Military Training," will not commence till Monday next, the Commissariat Department having been unable to furnish the special ration necessary for the practice until that date.

On Tuesday, minor operations were carried out under the general idea:—"A water convoy, returning with provisions from Basingstoke to a fortified post at the North Camp Magazine, Smallshot Hill, is threatened by a hostile force moving from Farnham. Neither force is supposed to have material for destroying bridges." The convoy represented by pontoons, manned by the Royal Engineers, was about half a mile in length, and moved at the rate of two miles an hour. It was guarded by 25 cavalry and 100 infantry, reached Pondtail Bridge by 10 a.m., shortly after which hour the operations commenced. The garrison of the post at Smallshot Hill, learning that a force of about 250 cavalry, 300 infantry, and 6 guns had marched to Farnham, with orders to intercept and capture the convoy, detached a force of 200 cavalry, 250 infantry, and 6 guns, to assist the convoy. The force failed to save the convoy, which was captured by the Southern force. The Northern force was commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Scott, R.H.A., and the Southern force by Lieutenant-Colonel Hart, 31st Regiment.

Captains Serjeant, Royal London Militia, Priestly, 2nd Royal Lancashire Militia, and Probyn, Royal South Gloucester Militia; Lieutenants Hoblyn, Royal London Militia, Meares, Dorset Militia, Madan and James, 2nd King's Own Stafford Militia, Stedman, 3rd Norfolk Rifle Volunteers, N. J. Macimes, J. T. Macimes, and Hendry, 10th Lanark Rifle Volunteers, will join the School of Instruction at Aldershot on Monday next, for a course of instruction.

On the departure of the 84th Regiment, about the 15th of next month, the 39th Regiment will move from the South Camp to the East Infantry Barracks, and be attached to the 2nd Brigade. This will reduce the strength of the 1st Brigade to about 900 of all ranks. The 3rd Brigade consists only of the 3rd Battalion, Rifle Brigade, and some details of the 87th, about 850 men.

A troop of the Life Guards and two troops of the Royal Horse Guards arrived from London on Monday last, and are going through a course of musketry practice at the Ash ranges.

Major McGill, Staff Adjutant of the Royal Military College of Canada, who has been attached to the 2nd Brigade for the past two months, has completed his infantry course, and will be attached for a further period to another branch of the service.

Probationary Veterinary-Surgeons Hazelton, Appleton, Blenkinsop, and Waddell have been ordered to Aldershot for duty.

EGYPTIAN NOTES.

If the Alexandrian garrison and the Gordon Highlanders were withdrawn, there would still remain 4,450 men in the country, with a sick list reduced to 5½ per cent.

THE RUSSIAN NAVY.

Since the entrance into office of the present Russian Minister of Marine, Admiral Schestakoff, the whole aspect of affairs at the Admiralty in St. Petersburg has been completely changed. It has been the Admiral's endeavour to instil new life into the various departments, and for this purpose numerous ancient officials have been compelled to make way for younger and more competent men. Those who are acquainted with Russian affairs will understand the difficulties, not to say dangers, which accompany every attempt at reorganisation in Russia; and the fact, therefore, that Admiral Schestakoff has been able to carry out his plans thus far, may be viewed as a sign that he is not only possessed of great energy, but also of powerful support in the highest quarters. An exhaustive review of the reformation of the active personnel of the Russian Navy has already appeared in these columns. The following are the leading features of the plan upon which the reorganisation of the Admiralty has been based:—The Chief of the Marine is endowed with the full powers of a Minister of State, and is at the same time the representative of the President of the Admiralty Council. The Supreme or Staff Department controls the command of the Fleet as regards tactics, the supply of vessels and seamen, and the employment of the Fleet in time of war. The Scientific Department reports on and introduces improvements and new inventions connected with Naval affairs. The Chief Constructor's Office comprises the departments for shipbuilding, armament, and torpedo-fittings. The fruits of Admiral Schestakoff's reforms are most apparent in the increased activity displayed by the Government and private shipbuilding establishments,—an activity which has not been equalled at any time within the last 25 years. That the contemplated rapid increase of the Russian Navy should be watched with a jealous eye by the German Government is only natural, and to this it is due that the most powerful ironclads of the German Navy, the Kaiser and Deutschland, have been removed from Wilhelmshaven and attached to the naval station at Kiel, on the Baltic. Insufficient training of officers and men has always been a weak point in the Russian Navy, owing chiefly to the small number of vessels kept in commission. Herein also the administration of Admiral Schestakoff has wrought a great change, as several additional ships-of-war have this year been despatched on distant voyages. Chief among these vessels is the ironclad Minin (8 in. armour, 16 8-in. and 6-in. guns), which left Cronstadt on August 28 for the purpose of joining the Squadron on the China stations. Her passage down the Baltic has been, for a Russian ship-of-war, singularly free from mishaps, although on the 6th inst., when off the island of Bornholm, she ran into and nearly sank the merchant vessel Brödres Minde, of Falster. A squadron, consisting of the cruisers Bojarin, Giljak, and Warjak, under the command of Rear-Admiral Kumani, put to sea from Reval on the 28th ult. It is reported that it is the object of this squadron to practice for the forthcoming evolutions before the Emperor. It will be remembered that the review lately held at Cronstadt was a failure.

A fund has been raised at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, among the officers of that institution and the gentlemen cadets, by which means the gravestones of their deceased comrades in St. Nicholas Churchyard, Plumstead, some of which are dated 1741, and had become overgrown with moss, and otherwise illegible, have been thoroughly restored. They have been taken up, cleaned, and re-lettered, the words "Restored by the R.M.A., 1883," being added underneath each inscription.

"A Wolseleyite" writes:—"I have read with much interest and sympathy your leading article of June 16 last, and also the whole of the correspondence on the subject of the very unhappy and invidious position of majors promoted since July 1, 1881. However, I hear that several Members of Parliament have kindly consented to take up their case next Session, but it is to be hoped that in the meantime no opportunity will be lost in placing it before the public, and not confine it simply to the military world. In conclusion, I would urge an unceasing agitation, and a few suggestions from those interested."

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught, who shortly return from Germany to England, are expected to stay a few days at Bagshot, and, after bidding farewell to their relatives and friends in this country, will leave for India. Their Royal Highnesses, attended by Lord and Lady Downe, Sir Maurice Fitzgerald, and Dr. Scott, on quitting London, travel overland to Brindisi, and thence by the P. and O. steamer Cathay to the East. The Cathay starts from Venice on Friday, Nov. 2.

The Army.

1st (Royal) Dragoons, stationed at Island Bridge Barracks, Dublin, will leave for Newbridge early next month, and will furnish a detachment for the Curragh for vedette duty, and it is rumoured that another detachment will probably be sent to Athlone.

5th Lancers. The regiment is to move from Newbridge to Dublin early next month, accompanied by the detachment at the Curragh, and will be quartered in Island Bridge Barracks.

7th Hussars. Capt. Thomson, Brigade-Major of Cavalry, Aldershot, has been appointed a member of the committee for revising the Regulations for the Instruction and Movements of Cavalry, 1876.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

We are requested to state that the late Lieut.-Col. Bullen died at Trinidad, of dysentery contracted on service in that island, and not at Barbadoes, as announced.

As we announced some time ago was probable, Major-Gen. H. Wray, C.M.G., has been appointed colonel on the Staff of the Army, and Lieut.-Governor to command the troops in the Island of Jersey, vice Lieut.-Gen. L. Nicholson, C.B.

Authority has been given by the Duke of Cambridge to the following officers to visit the various battle-fields on the Continent of Europe, in connection with their study of military history:—Major H. Tovey and Lieuts. H. B. Mackay, J. E. Edmonds, A. D. G. Shelley, and M. Chapman.

8th King's (Liverpool Regiment). Major Crawley has joined the head-quarters of the 1st Batn. at Cork as supernumerary of his rank, his period of service as an adjt. of Auxiliary Forces having expired. On the next vacancy occurring amongst the Majors in either battalion, he is likely to be absorbed.

12th Suffolk Regiment. Lieut. Montagu, 2nd Batn., now stationed at Oughterard, county Galway, had a narrow escape of drowning the other day. He was fishing, with Mr. George O'Flahertie, of Lemonfield, on Loch Corrib, when their skiff filled with water; but the occupants clung to an iron mark until two men, named Gannon and Welby, rescued them.

14th West Yorkshire Regiment. The 1st Batn. arrived in Ireland on Sunday last in H.M.S. Assistance, and has taken over quarters at Castlebar.

21st Royal Scots Fusiliers. The 1st Batn., at Dover, is expected to be moved to Aldershot shortly, but no orders have yet been issued on the subject.

23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers. The 2nd Batn., quartered at Pembroke Dock, under the command of Col. O'Connor, V.C., paraded in review order on the 20th inst., for trooping the colour and to celebrate the twenty-ninth anniversary of the battle of the Alma, where, it will be remembered, it lost so many of its officers, non-commissioned officers, and men. The day was fine, and a great number of visitors, including several ladies, were present to witness the parade. The regiment made a fair show as regards numbers, especially when it is considered that a draft of 140 non-commissioned officers and men had embarked for India a few days previous, to join the 1st Batn. The regiment marched past with great steadiness, after which the colour was trooped. The parade was brought to a close by an advance in line in review order.

24th South Wales Borderers. The 1st Batn. has arrived at Kilkenny from Manchester. The following appeared in the Irish Times of Thursday last:—"A very distinguished regiment passes through Dublin to-day, en route for Kilkenny from Manchester. Under the new territorial designation of the 'South Wales Borderers,' few will recognise the gallant 24th Regiment. It is now just 17 years since the 1st Battalion of the regiment—that which lands at the North Wall this morning—left Ireland, it having sailed from Belfast for Malta on October 1, 1866. The battalion was stationed in Malta for over five years, and was subsequently quartered at Gibraltar, from whence it went to the Cape of Good Hope, in 1874, and did good service there during the Kaffir war of 1877-78. In the terrible disaster of Jan. 21, 1879, 16 officers and 400 non-commissioned officers and men of the 1st Batn. and five officers and 175 men of the 2nd Batn. were killed. The 24th Regiment was formerly designated the 2nd Warwickshire, and more familiarly 'Howard's Greens,' from the colour of the facings it wore, until the recent changes were made doing away with the individuality of different corps. It is not only one of the oldest, but also one of the most 'fighting' regiments in the service. First formed in 1689, it earned early laurels at Blenheim and Malplaquet. It figured at the unsuccessful siege of Carthagena, at Minorca, in Egypt, and at the capture of the Cape of Good Hope. In the Peninsular wars it fought hard, and bears the names of Talavera, Fuentes d'Onor, Salamanca, Vittoria, Nivelle, Badajoz, and Orthez on its colours. In India it served through the Punjab campaign, and subsequently suffered severely at Mooltan. At the battle of Chillianwallah, on Jan. 13, 1849, the 24th Regiment was almost annihilated, from no fault of its own; but what was left of it participated in the triumph of Goojerat. The battalion was also severely engaged during the Mutiny in 1857, and returned to England in 1861, after a service of 15 years in India. Under the command of Col. Wodehouse, the regiment was quartered in Beggars' Bush Barrack in 1865-66, and some of our readers may remember the excellent performances of its splendid band, under the direction of Signor Tamplini, at the musical promenades then given at the Exhibition Palace. The regiment was most popular during its stay in this city at that time. Only two of the officers who were with the regiment in Dublin before accompany it now, viz., the officer commanding, Lieut.-Col. J. M. G. Tongue, and Lieut.-Col. Paton, C.M.G."

Major J. I. Morris, Capts. W. T. Allen, and W. H. Poë, and Lieut. G. Skipworth, R.M.L.I., have been directed to report themselves at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, for a course of study, commencing on the 29th inst.

An exchange of Divisions has been sanctioned between Major H. S. Bourchier, R.M.L.I., Chatham Division, and Major H. Gritton, R.M.L.I., Portsmouth Division.

Capt. W. P. Wright has been promoted to major at the Portsmouth Division, vice Allnutt (dated Sept. 8, 1883). Major Wright will be retained at the Chatham Division whilst holding the appointment of gunnery-instructor at that Division.

Lieuts. E. G. Wilkinson, J. B. Darling, and F. W. B. Roe, R.M.L.I., have been ordered to proceed to Hythe for a course of musketry instruction, commencing on the 1st prox.

Mr. J. H. Abrahall, late probationary Lieut., R.M.A., has been appointed a Lieut. in the R.M.L.I., with seniority of Sept. 1, 1882, and posted to the Portsmouth Division.

The following officers of the Royal Marine Light Infantry will embark on the 1st prox. in the ships stated against their names, to relieve others who will complete two years' service afloat on the 30th inst.:—Major and Brevet Lieut.-Col. J. Philips, C.B., Indus; Majors C. F. La Coste, Duke of Wellington; and H. Gritton, Pembroke; Capts. A. E. Sparshott, Excellent; A. P. Corbet, Lord Warden; and A. M. E. Hayes, Defence; Lieuts. F. H. N. Wilson, Penelope; F. J. Raitt, Revenge; W. J. Langford, Shannon; C. H. Kennedy, Hector; E. V. Luke, Lord Warden; and G. D'A. Anderson, Hercules.

A series of afternoon entertainments, consisting of lawn-tennis, dancing, and athletic sports, at the Royal Marine Barracks, Plymouth, were brought to a conclusion on the 20th inst., from 300 to 400 guests having been present on each occasion.

It is rumoured that Col. C. W. Burton, of the Chatham Division of Royal Marines, and senior lieut.-col. of the corps, is about to retire voluntarily, under the Order in Council of Feb. 22, 1870.

53rd (Shropshire) King's Light Infantry. It will be remembered that the late Major Geddes died at Aldershot on Oct. 31, 1881, and was interred at Edinburgh. The remains of the deceased were conveyed last week from Edinburgh to Aldershot, and deposited in a vault in the military cemetery. The coffin, which was covered with wreaths, was removed from the station on an open funeral car drawn by six horses, and was met at the cemetery by the Rev. J. Y. Barton, the officiating minister.

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. A detachment of the 2nd Batn. at Kensington will be removed to Portsmouth, Tipnor, and Marchwood, in the course of a few days.

64th North Staffordshire Regiment. The regiment has arrived at Manchester from Ireland.

73rd (Black Watch) Royal Highlanders. No orders have yet been issued with regard to the reported move of the regiment from Portsmouth to Aldershot.

84th York and Lancaster Regiment. Head-quarters and the service companies are in readiness to leave Aldershot about the 15th inst., to embark for Bermuda.

Pay Department. "One of Them" writes:—"In your last issue, you gave a warning to intending probationers for the Army Pay Department, the importance of which they would indeed do well to weigh. I allude to your forecast of the probable chance of promotion of those joining the Department now to the rank of staff paymaster, with its increased advantages in the matter of pay and allowances, and what is more important still, retired pay. I note that you allow a possible average of eight steps a year, and accepting your calculation, it will be seen that as there are at present 177 paymasters, any one joining the Department to-morrow may expect to become a staff paymaster in 22 years! It is evident, therefore, that hardly any one with more than the present minimum of ten years' service on appointment can hope to attain the higher rank at all, and the disadvantages of the retired pay of a paymaster, compared to that which equal service in the combatant ranks must confer, has been too recently very clearly pointed out by one of your correspondents to need recapitulation here. The only mode of creating a healthy flow of promotion is the concession of optional retirement after 25 years on £250 a year, i.e., assimilating the rates more nearly to those of the combatant ranks. Unless this is done, the dead-lock you foretell is inevitable, and it is to be hoped that very few may be found so blind to their own interests as voluntarily to subject themselves to its influence."

Veterinary Department. 1st Class Vet.-Surg. F. C. Boulter, who had only just returned from leave, was within a few days of his arrival seized with cholera, and died on the 11th inst.

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

"J. C. R." writes:—"With reference to the paragraph in your issue of Sept. 22, remarking on the small number of Militia officers who have passed in tactics, I should like to bring to your notice my own experience in the matter. I went up for the first examination held in 1882. My regiment was then out for its annual training, and I had to attend for examination at Bristol, some distance from where our camp was situated. I was not even allowed my travelling expenses, which amounted to 30s. or more. Had the papers been sent to where I was quartered, no travelling expenses would have been required. Had the examination taken place in the non-training period, I should have had to travel all the way from London, where I live, to Bristol to be examined, which would have cost me the expense of a night's lodging at a hotel, as well as travelling expenses. Under these circumstances, it is not wonderful that few Militia officers go up for the tactics examination."

11th Middlesex (Railway) Rifles. The following regimental orders by Lieut.-Col. C. E. Gore-Browne has been published this week:—"Orderly Room, 5 Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W., Sept. 26, 1883.—Farewell Order.—In retiring from the command of the 11th Middlesex Rifles, Lieut.-Col. Gore-Browne wishes to express his thanks to all ranks for the untiring zeal, enthusiasm, and esprit de corps displayed by them at all times, by which they have shown a love of order and discipline, and a desire, at great personal self-sacrifice, to make themselves acquainted with the duties of soldiers. By their ready and willing compliance with orders all ranks have, in the most praiseworthy manner, greatly aided and assisted him in his efforts to bring the corps in efficiency as near to the standard of a regiment of the Line as it is possible, from the constitution of the force, for Volunteers to be. He has the satisfaction of knowing that their laudable and constant efforts have been attended with a very considerable degree of success. The regiment has grown in strength, its drill and efficiency have been warmly acknowledged on repeated occasions by high and competent military authorities, while its financial condition has also greatly improved, and is now of a most satisfactory character. With heartfelt regrets Lieut.-Col. Gore-Browne has to announce that, owing to circumstances entirely irrespective of the corps, the hour has now come when he is compelled to relinquish its command. In his retirement, however, he will continue to watch, with the deepest interest, the future career of the regiment. He hopes that it will go on increasing in strength and efficiency; that all ranks will, as heretofore, endeavour to make the corps a real defence to its Queen and country; and, with an affectionate farewell, he wishes every officer, non-commissioned officer, and man 'God speed.'" The retirement of Col. Gore-Browne is a great loss to the Volunteer service.

The Board of Visitors appointed to inspect the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich and the Royal Military College at Sandhurst, for the year 1883, attended at the former institution on June 30. The members of the Board are Lord Enfield, chairman ; Lord George Hamilton, Gen. Sir E. C. Hodge, Lieut.-Gens. Sir C. L. D'Aguilar and Sir G. H. Willis, and Major-Gen. A. Lyon Fremantle. Their report, which has just been issued, states that there are now only 180 cadets in residence at the academy, but that this number will shortly be raised to the full establishment, 200, at which it will be maintained in future. In consequence of the demand for officers of the scientific corps through the war in Egypt, and other causes, the military authorities decided to bring forward for commissions in October last the 2nd class of cadets, who, under ordinary circumstances, would not have passed out of the academy until February, 1883. The demand for officers of the Royal Artillery and Engineers has for some years past been greatly in excess of the supply, and it was found necessary from time to time to commission the senior class of cadets before the completion of their course of two-and-a-half years. These repeated changes were found to greatly interfere with the satisfactory working of the system pursued at the academy, and the Secretary of State therefore decided that for the present the course should be shortened by six months, and the number of admissions increased by 20 annually. Under this arrangement 100 cadets will be available for commissions each year, but the change will involve no material alteration in the course of study. In regard to the discipline of the school, since September, 1882, the first-class cadets have shared, to some extent, in the work of supervision in the institution, and the arrangement has been found to work very satisfactory. An important alteration has been made since the last inspection with regard to the study of modern languages, the number having been restricted to two, one of which, either French or German, is obligatory. By the retirement on pension of Dr. Schaible, Professor of German, in September last, after 21 years' service, the academy has, the report observes, suffered a great loss. The progress made by the cadets in their studies during the past year was very satisfactory and up to the average, and there had been little or no complaint made of their conduct. The results of the term examinations in July, 1882, and February, 1883, were very encouraging, and the Governor reported that the tone and general bearing of the cadets had been excellent, and their health thoroughly good. The Royal Military College at Sandhurst was inspected by the Board of Visitors on June 29, and in their report they observe that the number of cadets in the college had been for some time past much below the normal strength, and there are now only 198 cadets under instruction ; but the absorption of supernumerary officers—consequent on the altered establishment from July 1, 1881—having been now practically completed, the full muster of cadetships was offered for competition at the recent entrance examination by the Civil Service Commissioners, and by February, 1884, the institution will be again raised to its full strength of 300. The report by the Governor to the Board of Inspection stated that the conduct of the cadets during the past two terms was most satisfactory ; that the result of the final examination in July, 1882, was evidence of the care with which the cadets were taught, and of the attention they gave to their lessons, and that the examiners reported that the papers on military administration, law, tactics, and topography were highly creditable. The last examination in July, though not equal to the preceding one, was fair. The Visitors state that the recommendation made by the Board in their last report, that increased facilities should be afforded the cadets for the study of modern languages, and that, at the preliminary examination for admission to the college, the obligatory subject of mathematics should in future include algebra as far as simple equations, is now, with other matters bearing on the literary qualifications of candidates for the Army, engaging the attention of the Secretary of State. New regulations, it is understood, will shortly be issued. After referring to certain matters of government and routine affecting the institution, the report concludes by stating that the health of the cadets since the last inspection has been good, no cases of serious illness having occurred, and that the Board were particularly struck with the fine physique of the cadets on parade.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1883.

THE invention and first use of rockets as signals are involved in obscurity which it would be difficult now to penetrate. The celebrated Benjamin Robins made some careful experiments in 1748 and 1750, to ascertain the heights to which rockets of different sizes would ascend, and the distances from which they could be seen. No attempts were made, as far as we have read, to adapt them to the destructive purposes of war till the beginning of the present century, when General Sir William Congreve, R.A., made several important changes in their construction. In 1806, he proposed to use them for the destruction of the French camp and flotilla at Boulogne, but his offer was not accepted. These war-rockets, which long bore the name of their inventor, were used in great numbers and with deadly effect at our siege of Flushing in 1809. We read of them occasionally during the Peninsular War (notably at the passage of the Adour and the battle of Orthes), and during the last campaign of the American War. In 1814, the rocket detachments of the Royal Artillery were formed into two troops, the first composed of those at home, and the second of those on foreign service. The officers and men of the second troop had done good service at Leipsic in 1816, and were the only British troops engaged in that great battle. This troop bore the word "Leipsic" as a special distinction. It afterwards served at Waterloo, but as Horse Artillery, using rockets, however, in addition to its guns. On its reduction in 1816, the word "Leipsic" was granted to the first troop, which had never left England. A long stick was attached to each rocket to guide its flight, till, by Hale's invention, rotation was given by causing the products of combustion to issue from holes inclined at an angle to the axis. By this contrivance, greater steadiness of flight has been attained than formerly by the use of the stick, though rockets are still occasionally erratic. The reputation of rockets as effective engines of war has always been, like their course, somewhat uncertain, and many military commanders viewed them with unconcealed distrust. Tropical climates seem to act injuriously on rockets, for they sometimes prove more dangerous to friends than foes in India. It is said that from long-continued heat, the rocket composition becomes cracked and liable to explode, instead of burning at the usual rate. The imperfections which at present make rocket practice uncertain in its results, both on those using rockets and on their enemies, may in time be removed, and the rocket become a truly formidable engine. The late explosion at Woolwich teaches some useful lessons. It proves that rockets may be accidentally ignited, even when all the precautions hitherto suggested by science and experience are systematically taken; it shows that a great number of rockets may be discharged at random in a large town without killing any one; and it suggests the expediency of storing rockets with their heads pointed towards an earthen traverse, or some similar structure, into which, in the event of accidental ignition, they may be harmlessly driven.

In a paragraph in last week's paper referring to a court-martial, the sentence of which was reported in the daily papers, on officers of the Royal Marines, "Lieutenant Watson" was named as one of those officers who were sentenced to be severely reprimanded on charges connected with an occurrence at Chatham Barracks. As we are informed that Lieutenant Watson is the only officer of the name in the corps, and that he was not charged before the court in any way, and is entirely innocent of any participation in the incident referred to, we beg to express to Lieutenant Watson our regret that his name should have been mentioned, and to tender to him a full apology for the error. The correction of the erroneous statements in the other papers which fell into the same mistake escaped our notice, but we hasten, on the first intimation of the wrong, to tender the expressions of our regret for the injury unwittingly done to Lieutenant Watson in the paragraph last week.

The supposed prolongation of Major-Generals Cameron and Gamble in commands beyond the usual term of five years, which expires on October 1, will create great heartburning. As General Gamble will be caught by the age clause on August 15, 1885, if not then a Lieutenant-General, his remaining in the West Indies until April 1 next may only cause some General to be retired for non-employment between October 1, 1888, and April 1, 1889, who otherwise might have been saved by getting this command, had it been again vacated after a five years' tenure in October, 1888. But General Cameron's extra six months may cause some Major-General hereafter to be retired in that rank who would otherwise have become a Lieutenant-General, a Major-General five years hence to be retired for non-employment, a Colonel's promotion to be delayed six months, and, perhaps, also some other Colonel to be retired upon £420 per annum, instead of on over £600 as a Major-General. It is the Colonels some way down the list who chiefly feel the unfairness of this breakage of rules, and almost each one of them imagines that he may be the personal sufferer by it. The worst of it all is it will form a precedent for every Major-General who has got his present command at any other date than the commencement of the financial year to expect to be kept on, to the detriment of his juniors, for as many months more than his five years as will terminate his career on an All Fools' Day! The five years' rule is kept hard and fast to the day with commanding officers of regiments, except in the field; and so it should be, in common justice, with General Officers.

An impression appears to prevail in some quarters that Egypt is called upon to maintain the entire cost of the Army of Occupation. This is not, however, the case. The Egyptian Exchequer is supposed to pay solely the difference between the cost of those soldiers in Egypt and their cost in England. The English Government professes to make nothing out of the transaction, and the charge made and paid by the Egyptian Government is £4 per month per man. Now, we should very much like to know how that amount is arrived at, when there are plenty of Europeans in Egypt who do not spend much more than that amount, and plenty of families of six persons who can live together comfortably for six times that amount. We ask, how is it that 6,000 soldiers require £24,000 per month to cover only the extra expense of being in Egypt? The only information we can obtain is that £1 per month goes to Transport, and £3 per month to the War Office. Now, for £24 any person can travel to England and back, so that it appears that the Admiralty is taking an amount which would cover the cost of an ordinary double passage for half the entire troops. In other words, they are taking for this month £6,705, and that would allow 230 men to go to England, and the same number to return, in this one month. As to the remaining £3 which goes to the War Office, it represents 2s. per day per man. Now, many a commercial clerk in Egypt gets all his meals for 3s. a day, and we ask again how it happens that soldiers living in large numbers together should cost 2s., not for their entire keep, which would be reasonable, but 2s. more than they would cost in England. It must be borne in mind that this charge does not include the expense of barrack accommodation, house-room for the General, &c. Nearly £100,000 has already been separately expended by the Egyptian Government, under this head. One of two things is absolutely certain,—either that the English Government is doing things in a recklessly extravagant manner, or it is making an excellent financial transaction out of the Egyptian Occupation.

At many Military stations the results of recent legislation are becoming very serious. At our largest Military station, more than one-half of the patients in hospital are suffering from the disease which has received the protection of Mr. Stansfeld and his colleagues. The necessity of much closer weekly medical inspections is therefore under consideration.

The following Staff Officers of the Royal Canadian Forces, viz., Lieutenant-Colonels Maunsell, le Comte d'Orsonnens, and Otter, of the Infantry; Turnbull, of the Cavalry; and Magill, of the Staff of the Royal Military College, Kingston, have been at Aldershot since August, to study the interior economy and tactics of "the three arms," and Military engineering, preparatory to organising and establishing in Canada schools of instruction, to consist permanently of one regiment of cavalry, three battalions of infantry, and two batteries of field artillery. These officers are now going through a course of instruction in tactics, field fortification, topography, and military law, under Major C. L. Harvey, Garrison Instructor. Lieutenant-Colonel MacDonald, of the Artillery, has been through a course of gunnery instruction at Shoeburyness. He brought with him a "team" of Royal Canadian Artillerymen, who distinguished itself by winning the prize for rapidity in dismounting, travelling, and mounting heavy ordnance at Shoeburyness, in competition against "teams" of Royal Artillerymen.

The responsible authorities are probably wise in withdrawing from general circulation the usual printed criticisms on the conduct of military operations, major and minor, at the Camp. These "Remarks," which in former years, when written by a master-hand, could bear the light of day, have now become mysterious documents, the full signification of which is only known to the "inoculated."

Early in 1881, Lord Cranbrook gave £1,000 towards the foundation of a Church of England Soldiers' Institute. A scheme for the Institute was sanctioned by the War Office, a site was secured between the South Camp and Permanent Barracks, and plans were prepared. It was found, however, that a further sum of £3,000 was required to carry out the idea, and an influential committee of officers was formed, who made a general appeal to the Army to aid this fund by subscriptions and donations. After two years' labour the result was that, of the £3,000 asked for, £190 5s. 6d. was subscribed, and the Committee deemed it unadvisable to proceed further with the endeavour. The sum subscribed was handed over to a Church of England Soldiers' Institute in Aldershot. This enabled the working committee to build a structure. But more money is required, and already appeals have been going the round of the Press asking for this institution. Denominational soldiers' institutes, though steadily increasing, in fact are of but little real benefit to the Army at large. What is really wanted is a secular institute, in a central position in the Camp, which would be free to all.

The "order of precedence of Warrant and Non-commissioned Officers" is detailed in General Order 120, of September 1, with extraordinary minuteness. The relative places of Warrant Officers bearing 20, and of Non-commissioned Officers bearing no less than 110, different titles are given. The designations of some functionaries among them must appear very strange to those who are not familiar with the endless alterations of titles which are supposed by some to constitute Army reorganisation. Among the Warrant Officers, Serjeant-Major Mechanist, Serjeant-Major Foreman of Works, Serjeant-Major Instructor Manufacturing Department, Serjeant-Major Educational Department, and Serjeant-Major Artificer Corps of Ordnance Artificers occur; and among the Non-commissioned officers, Quartermaster-Serjeant Mechanist, Quartermaster-Serjeant Engineer Clerk, Quartermaster-Serjeant Foreman of Proof (!), Quartermaster-Serjeant Instructor of Gymnasia, Collar-maker Quartermaster-Serjeant, Company Serjeant-Major Foreman of Works, and Serjeant Photographer. To call men who perform all sorts of odd duties Serjeant-Majors and Quartermaster-Serjeants, merely because they rank with them, is to render, as far as words can do so, those well-known and respected titles ridiculous. Should it be deemed expedient to employ a Corporal to look after a garden, or to superintend the cultivation of vegetables, we presume he will be styled Corporal Botanist; and if a Serjeant should be employed in an observatory, he ought surely to be called Serjeant Astronomer. Further, as the organised application of æronautics to military purposes cannot be deferred much longer, we may look for the speedy appearance in orders of Balloon Serjeants and Parachute Corporals! It is commonly believed that a plumber, whenever he gets into a house, makes work for other tradesmen, and that he is often followed by slaters, carpenters, plasterers, and painters. There must be some plumbers at the War Office.

What "Dogs" writes in the Morning Post regarding the state of the regiments in the garrison of Portsmouth is equally, if not more, applicable to those in the South-Eastern District. With fifty men at musketry, will it be credited that the solitary Shorncliffe battalion the other day had not six men available for garrison duty; and the "ould Eighty-third," as a Royal Irish Rifleman called his corps, marched to Lydd for rifle practice last week under 150 strong, although they landed from South Africa with over 800 rank and file? Now that work is about to be resumed at head-quarters, it is earnestly to be hoped that Lord Wolseley will himself see to these things, for in such miserably attenuated battalions it is impossible to find sufficient stuff to make a really efficient staff of reliable non-commissioned officers, and consequently no Colonel could suddenly, on an emergency, constitute an effective battalion for field service.

In the Economical and Statistical Section of the British Association, the Anthropometric Committee presented a report to the Anthropological Department, in which it is stated that recruits of the British Army of the age of 18 years may be expected to increase 1 in. in stature, 1½ in. in chest measurement, and 10 lb. in weight, before they attain the age of 22 years. And who could doubt anything vouched for by such a string of adjectives?

Just twelve years ago, in September, 1871, an Army Corps, composed of 11 regiments of Cavalry, 15 batteries of horse and field Artillery, 40 battalions of Infantry (Regulars, Militia, and Volunteers), with Engineers and Commissariat Corps, under the command of the Duke of Cambridge, was massed at Aldershot. Nearly a fortnight was spent in organisation. On September 14, the real work commenced, and on the 22nd, the Army Corps, numbering 30,233 men, 5,701 horses, and 90 guns, marched past in the Long Valley, before a vast concourse of spectators, among whom were military representatives of nearly all the Powers of Europe and of the United States. Aldershot has seen no such assemblage of troops since; manœuvres on a large scale have been out of the question for years past. It is, at least, open to doubt whether these minor exercises, steadily practised at Aldershot for years, have been an unmixed benefit to all engaged in them.

Seven subalterns are still wanted to complete the Household Cavalry. A few years ago the Household Cavalry had no difficulty in keeping up its numbers,—indeed, there was a long waiting list; but now, commissions in the Brigade seem to be going begging.

The reliefs between England and Ireland are arranged on some very curious system. The 37th Regiment has been in Ireland for three years, and is, apparently, to remain in that country throughout the winter. But the 36th Regiment, which has been a much shorter time in the command, is being brought to England. In the good old times, a roster was kept and strictly adhered to; but now everything is so jumbled up, that anything like system is, we suppose, out of the question. It must, nevertheless, prove very inconvenient to both officers and men to find that they cannot even estimate within a year or so the duration of their stay in Ireland. Perhaps we are gradually getting back to the practice of the last century, when regiments were left for forty or fifty years in Ireland.

The selection of Mr. Edgar Vincent, late Coldstream Guards, as Financial Adviser to the Egyptian Government, is a well-deserved compliment to one who has risen by hard work and perseverance. It is rarely that we find one so young and comparatively inexperienced coming so rapidly to the front; but, then, it very seldom happens that men of Mr. Vincent's age have made the sacrifices which he has done in order to fit themselves for positions of trust and responsibility.

A correspondent has written to us protesting against a paragraph which appears in the London letter of several provincial papers, reflecting on a certain Militia regiment, which it is said was lately visited by a detective who gravely informed its colonel that there was one man in it he didn't know. He turned out to be the latest joined recruit. Our correspondent considers such a story will naturally prove damaging. "A Militia Field-officer" should not have been taken in by such rubbish. This story is as "old as the hills," and has been related of nearly every Militia regiment in the kingdom for the last quarter of a century.

"Barbarossa" writes:—"It is to be hoped that the current rumour to which your correspondent 'R. N.' refers in the letter inserted in your number of the 15th inst. may prove unfounded. The statement that Mr. Swainson had been 'selected' to draw up the case for reference to the Law Officers of the Crown, is of itself difficult of belief. It is hardly credible that the Attorney-General should require Mr. Swainson's assistance when the proceedings of the court-martial are available, and those of the court of inquiry also, if the Lords of the Admiralty should not be averse to the latter being produced. But this in itself would not deserve particular comment, were it not accompanied by an assertion that the gentleman in question was imbued with a prejudice against Com. Heron, which he had permitted himself to exhibit in an unmistakable manner at the court-martial. If, therefore, the assertion be correct, Com. Maxwell Heron may well be commiserated, for, in connection with another court-martial last year, there may be grounds for thinking that justice will suffer. In the case to which I refer, the officer, a paymaster of the Cambridge, was tried for negligent performance of duty, was found guilty and sentenced to dismissal from his ship and a severe reprimand. The court was composed of officers who were as capable of forming an impartial judgment and of awarding an adequate punishment as a permanent clerk of the Admiralty could be. But it would seem that it is within the functions of Mr. Swainson to criticise and comment on the sentences awarded by courts-martial, for in that gentleman's report to the Admiralty, dated July 6, 1882, are to be found these words:—'There was gross and culpable neglect of duty on the part of Mr. Parish, which has been lightly [sic] visited on him by a sentence of severe reprimand and dismissal from his ship.' It may be doubted whether the Captains of H.M.'s Navy have been aware how (confidentially, of course) their sentences have been reported on by a civilian assistant-secretary. Such a power may well be regarded as a dangerous one, and how or when it came to be exercised, and what were the antecedents or qualifications which justified their Lordships in delegating to Mr. Swainson so delicate a duty, are questions which an 'Independent' Member might well ask, on the reassembling of Parliament. In the meantime, even people who are not 'independent' will ask each other, 'Are we reverting to the days of John Wilson Croker, and is there given to us yet another Rigby?'"

The Raleigh, at Keyham, will be out of the Dockyard hands early next year. Arrangements have been made for mounting 6-in. breech-loading guns on the upper and main deck, the rest of the armament to consist of the ordinary 90-cwt. guns, and fittings have been made for mounting a number of machine-guns on various parts of the bulwarks.

On Saturday last the Fisheries Exhibition was visited by several thousands of Government dockyard employés. The visit was owing to an arrangement made by the dockyard authorities to allow the men to take Saturday as a substitute for the holiday usually granted upon the occasion of the annual visit of the Lords of the Admiralty. By the liberality of the directors of the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway, trains were placed at the disposal of the employés at the Portsmouth dockyard and their wives, &c., and a large reduction was made in the fares. The South-Western Railway Company had, with similar liberality, arranged for the conveyance of some 2,000 visitors from Devonport. The managers of the Fisheries Exhibition had issued tickets at a considerable reduction on the usual price of admission.

Torbay, Friday, September 28.

It was intended to have left Portland early on Monday, but as the morning found a south-west gale blowing, with heavy rain and thick, dirty weather, our departure was postponed. It cleared up a little in the forenoon, so boats were hoisted in, and preparations made for a start, but the improvement in the weather not continuing, it was decided to wait till next day. On Tuesday, we unmoored in the morning and weighed at 9.30. The wind had gone down considerably, and the weather was fine, though still rather hazy. The Northumberland was delayed a little with a foul anchor, but soon took her station again. The Valorous remained behind. After clearing the anchorage, the Squadron exercised at steam tactics during the rest of the forenoon, and stood to the westward under easy steam, against a head wind, during the afternoon. After evening quarters, we altered course 16 points, made sail, and exercised making and shortening all possible sail. After drill, sails were furled, and a westerly course resumed for the night. During the night the breeze freshened again, and top-gallant masts were struck. On Wednesday morning, though blowing hard still from the south-west, it was otherwise bright and fine. At 9 o'clock we shaped course for Tor Bay, arrived off Torquay, and came to soon after noon. The Minotaur's dance on Friday was a great success. They were exceptionally fortunate in the weather. There was a large attendance from Weymouth and the neighbourhood, and all appeared to enjoy themselves thoroughly; indeed, one would have been hard to please who did not. On Saturday, a return cricket-match was played with the Queen's Regt. on their ground at the Verne Fort, Portland, and, although the Squadron team was beaten, it proved a very interesting one. The Navy went in first, and made 72; the Queen's followed, and only made 44, but, playing up well in the second innings, got the Squadron eleven out for exactly the same number, leaving them with an hour and a quarter before them and 73 runs to get to win. This they succeeded in doing a few minutes before time was up, with the loss of five wickets. We got under weigh at 9.30 yesterday, and went out for steam tactics, returned to our anchorage, and came to at 2 o'clock. This morning at 9.30 we weighed, and went outside for Whitehead torpedo practice, returning at 3 p.m. We leave to-morrow for Plymouth.

The medal for long service and good conduct has been awarded to T. Gorman, master-at-arms, of the Nelson; R. Hayward, captain of the foretop, of the Excellent; W. Gooding, boatman of the Coastguard; and M. Vella, first-class domestic, of the Hibernia.

The Emerald, lately paid off after a commission on the Australian station, is again being brought forward for commission at Portsmouth, and will be greatly strengthened and improved in her armament. Instead of the 12 64-pounders which she last carried, she will be equipped with eight 5-in. and four 6-in. breech-loaders, and six machine-guns, while the Vavasour carriages, racers, and other fittings for each of the smaller calibres weigh four and a half tons. The gear for the 6-in. guns weighs nine and a half tons.

The rolling experiments with the Edinburgh, armour-plated turret-ship, were continued at Portsmouth last week, under the supervision of Mr. Watts, Admiralty constructor, from Whitehall, and the representative of Mr. Froude. The bulkheads at the end of the water chamber had been removed, and the chamber made watertight, and extended to the right coffer bulkheads. Between five and six hundred seamen from different ships were engaged in the experiments. It was found that the angles of keel varied from three to upwards of twelve degrees, the ship developing the greatest steadiness when the water ballast was 78 tons.

The Wild Swan, at Devonport, is undergoing extensive alterations. The armament is being altered to eight breech-loading guns, six of them being 5-in., of which two are pivots, one forward and the other aft, and two 6-in. breech-loaders on the after part of the quarter-deck. A poop is also being added. No date has been named for her completion.

The turret-ship Agamemnon was taken from Plymouth into the Channel on Friday last, when the trial of her guns was resumed in the presence of Admiral Brandreth, Controller of the Navy, and a large number of naval officers. The accuracy of the guns and the efficiency of their new automatic sights were put to a severe test, the charges used in each case being 157½ lb. of powder, with projectiles weighing 800 lb. The firing from beginning to end was exceedingly good. Altogether 20 rounds were discharged at distances from 700 to 2,000 yards. The greatest deviation in direction was about five yards, and this happened in every case to the right gun in the fore turret, consequent upon an increased compression on the hydraulic springs in that weapon over the remaining guns causing a slight oscillation of the turret. The target was struck twice, and the greatest deviation in the elevation was about 30 yards. After the target practice the guns were trained and fired fore and aft for the first time since they have been placed in the vessel. In the Inflexible it was impossible to fire them in this position at a greater angle than 75 degrees before the beam, without danger to the superstructure; but in the Agamemnon the left gun in the fore turret was fired parallel with the keel, and the right gun at an angle of 88 degrees to the beam, the only damage being the jerking out of position of a few mess tables in the after compartment of the lower deck. The left gun in the after turret was fired to within an angle of 75 degrees before the beam, and the right gun in a line with the keel. At the conclusion of the trials Admiral Brandreth expressed himself satisfied with the results, which he said exceeded his expectations. The ship was in charge of Capt. Kelly, of the Steam Reserve, and the firing experiments were under the supervision of Capt. A. Buller, late of the gunnery-ship Cambridge.

THE ARSENALS OF CHINA.—II.

We lately gave an account of the arsenals possessed by China. As to their capabilities, it may be said that ample machinery and plant are erected. But to render the war material fit for actual service, it would be necessary to call in experienced European workmen. The foreigners employed are very few, and the majority are connected with the Shanghai arsenal and the two gunpowder factories; the Canton, Foochow, and Nankin arsenals, and the cartridge factory at Tientsin being entirely in the hands of the Chinese. The quality of the work turned out at the various arsenals is, on the whole, fairly good; but with the exception of the heavy guns built at Shanghai, it in general lacks finish; and there is, besides, a want of exactness. At the Nankin Arsenal a number of field carriages and limbers were recently manufactured, which to a superficial observer might have appeared, in all the glory of new paint and varnish, quite as good as the original European pattern, but a few months after their completion they were gradually falling to pieces. Further, there is an entire absence of originality in the Chinese, combined with considerable self-conceit. This self-conceit leads the Chinese to conceive that what Europeans can achieve in the way of building ships, manufacturing guns, rifles, torpedoes, electrical instruments, &c., they can do equally as well, provided only a sample to copy from be provided them. Some years since, the Chinese, wishing to construct an Armstrong rifled gun, ignoring the rifling, and failing to appreciate the principle, actually turned down one of their own heavy cast-iron guns in such a way that the different jackets on the Armstrong weapon were represented on the cast-iron gun, and thus they imagined that the system of construction of rifled ordnance, as at that time adopted by Sir W. Armstrong, had been mastered. The Chinese are clever copyists, but can hardly be termed manufacturers, and certainly not engineers. Immense sums of money have been spent, or rather squandered, by the Chinese Government in establishing their arsenals, dockyards, carridge and gunpowder factories; but this enormous expenditure will avail them but little, if ever they find themselves exposed to a first-class Military Power, and are forced to have recourse to their arsenals worked by Chinese for the supply of war material. Besides which, in some instances, the Government of China have availed themselves of the services of foreigners totally inexperienced, though the high salaries paid should have enabled the Chinese to have secured the services of thoroughly experienced men. The military power of China is materially improved, in comparison with its condition in 1860, when a combined English and French force succeeded in capturing Pekin. The number of soldiers drilled and disciplined in accordance with the system in European armies has been variously estimated at from 20,000 to 50,000 men, but it is extremely improbable that 10,000 of them will be efficient when the test of actual service comes to be applied. Here and there are to be found a few ex-officers and men of the German Army in the employ of China, and some Chinese officers have been attached to the German Army; but it can hardly be realised that, with such scanty means at her disposal, China can bring any large number of efficient soldiers into the field at the present time. War material in abundance has been from time to time purchased by the Chinese Government, but the varied nature of this material, more particularly in the matter of small-arms, which include smooth-bores, Enfield, Remington, Pirie, and Martini-Henry rifles, Winchester and Hotchkiss magazine rifles, with their corresponding different kinds of ammunition, must in itself lead to serious trouble and much confusion, with the possible result of causing disastrous consequences, when the Chinese troops thus variously armed are brought face to face with an enemy who holds the position of one of the first-class Military Powers of the world. It must not be forgotten that a large portion of the Chinese military forces are still armed with bows and arrows. The Chinese suffer, in common with most of the Eastern nations, in the want of good native officers, and though this might be remedied in a small degree by employing foreign officers, yet it could not prove very beneficial at the outset. Then the extreme jealousy of foreigners must ever form a stumbling-block in the administration, organisation, and manœuvring of a large body of troops, where there exists a mixture of foreign and native officers. Broadly speaking, the time is not yet ripe for the Chinese to venture on a struggle with a first-class Military Power, such as France undoubtedly is, and it is to be hoped that the counsels of the peace party in China will prevail. At the same time, the French will find the task they have set themselves a far more serious and difficult one than they seem to credit, if they have to deal with a spirited opposition on the part of the Chinese, for the latter possess enormous numbers of men, and a considerable quantity of first-class war material, and further, the nature of the country in and about Tonquin would immensely favour the native troops. The mere possession of Krupp field-guns, Remington, Winchester, and Hotchkiss rifles, machine-guns, &c., does not carry with it the quality of converting a mob of men into a force of soldiers, but yet will render a mob very formidable; and the former is a point which the Chinese, in common with other Eastern nations, have yet to learn. Great stress has been laid on the exploits performed by the gallant band of Chinese soldiers trained and commanded by "Chinese Gordon"; but it must be remembered that the enemy were their own countrymen, not as well armed as themselves, and with only native officers to lead them, and therefore the soldiers composing the Ever Victorious Army had the advantage of feeling themselves infinitely superior to their opponents. But when the Chinese troops are opposed to European troops, it is inconceivable to imagine them exhibiting the same stubborn and enthusiastic bravery as a small body fighting under Colonel Gordon's command against their countrymen. Coming next to Naval power, we find it, at the present time, is composed of—Two wooden frigates, constructed in China; 14 wooden gun-vessels, 1 ironclad monitor, built at Shanghai; 11 gunboats, built by Sir W. Armstrong and Co., each of which is armed with one heavy gun, two with one 26-ton gun each, two with one 38-ton gun each, and seven with one 35-ton each; 2 steel cruisers, also built by that firm, each armed with two 25-ton guns; 2 small armoured vessels, constructed at Stettin, Germany, one of which is completed, but has not yet joined the Chinese flag; and 4 fast torpedo-boats, built in Germany. The Chinese Fleet are divided into two divisions, north and south,—the former being under the command of Li Hun Chung, and the latter under the direction of the Governor of the southern provinces; Tientsin and Shanghai being respectively the head-quarters of the former division, and Foochow and Canton of the southern division. The Chinese Navy must be considered as essentially a defensive one, for with the exception of the two afore-mentioned Armstrong steel cruisers and the two wooden frigates, the Chinese do not possess any vessels which are adapted for sea-going offensive operations. This sea-going force will be further strengthened when the two Stettin ironclads have been received. For transport service, the Chinese are fairly well off, as they can utilise all the China Merchant Company's steamers, which the Government have subsidised for the purpose. These steamers are small, but very handy craft, steam well, and can carry a large number of Chinese soldiers, as they can be crowded into a very small space. The two Armstrong steel cruisers have their engines, boilers, and magazines placed beneath the water-line, and are further protected by a steel-plate deck, but owing to the complex nature of their engines, and the various machinery for working their guns, steering apparatus, &c., it is highly improbable that, commanded and manned by Chinese, they will afford any very serious trouble to the ships of any European Power they may be opposed to, at least until the Chinese have had considerably more practical experience in the management of such vessels, the manipulation of the complicated machinery, and the working of their heavy guns, than they can lay claim to at the present time; and the same may be said of the German-built Chinese ironclads, and in a minor degree of the Armstrong gunboats. In the Chinese Navy there are a few Europeans employed for the purposes of organisation and instruction, some of whom have been lent for this work from the Imperial Chinese Customs Department; but a vast deal more requires to be effected, and that in a systematic manner, if the Chinese Naval officers and men are to be rendered capable of taking charge of, and effectively fighting, the class of vessels which the Naval advisers of the Chinese Government appear to consider the most suitable for that Power to possess, but which vessels in their interior arrangements and armaments are undoubtedly far too complicated, and embody too many ideal notions, for any Power whose Navy is yet in a state of infancy. Though China possesses an immense seaboard, the Chinese cannot be said to be first-rate sailors. At the same time, there is evidence of much more having been effected in forming a small body of them into good men-of-war's men than has been achieved in the same direction in the sister-service. The torpedo service of China, the efficiency of which has been much exaggerated of late, may be truly said to be in its infancy, as it is sadly deficient in men who can claim any real practical knowledge of this branch of Naval warfare, the reason for which will be at once apparent, when it is stated that hitherto the foreigners engaged for instruction in the torpedo schools have not been trained as torpedo officers, or had any actual experience in torpedo operations. In conclusion, it may truly be said that, with her vast natural resources, her great wealth, the vast number of her inhabitants, China might become one of the most important and powerful nations of the world; but to effect this it will be absolutely necessary to evoke the aid of foreigners thoroughly capable of developing her immense resources and training her soldiers and sailors, and to carry out the scheme on a systematic principle, and not hap-hazard, as at present. In the event of war, success will sooner or later attend the French, provided they do not underrate the defensive power of the Chinese, for though the latter lack highly-trained officers and men, they are numerically powerful, are possessed of many vessels for defensive purposes and of a quantity of modern war material, and will be fighting on their own territory, while the French will have the vast disadvantage of carrying on a war at an immense distance from home.

Amusements.

At Drury Lane Theatre the new drama by Messrs. Robert Buchanan and Augustus Harris is in active rehearsal, and will be produced on October 8. It deals with a domestic episode of our own time, partly founded on recent disclosures and partly on facts privately known to the authors, and in it an attempt will be made, while telling a simple human story of love and treason, to represent life as it is in the country, in London, and on the sea. The same attention Mr. Harris has invariably given to pictorial accuracy and truth of mise-en-scène in his productions will be bestowed in the illustration of familiar English pictures and home surroundings. Miss Kate Vaughan has been engaged at the largest salary she has ever received to appear in the next pantomime. "Youth" has been translated into French, and Mr. A. Harris is in treaty with the managers of the Chatelet Theatre, for the production of the play in Paris.

The Haymarket Theatre will be reopened for the season this evening (Saturday), with the play of "Fédora," Mr. Bancroft and Mrs. Bernard Beere appearing in the principal characters.

The Court Theatre reopens this week with a new drama adapted from Mr. Edward Yates's novel called "Kissing the Rod." The play is produced under the title of "The Millionaire."

At the Princess's is in preparation a new poetical dramatic romance, devised by Mr. Hermann and written by Mr. W. G. Wills. In the meantime, "A Clerical Error" will be transferred to this theatre as a prelude to the still attractive drama of "The Silver King."

At the Royal Comedy Theatre Planquette's comic opera of "Rip Van Winkle" has now passed its three-hundredth representation with every indication of continued popularity. As a substitute for Mr. Lionel Brough, transferred to the Avenue Theatre, Mr. Harry Paulton has been engaged, and his rendering of Nick Vedder, though entirely distinct from that of his predecessor, is hardly less provocative of laughter.

At the Savoy Theatre, where "Iolanthe" has nearly completed a twelve-months' continuous run, Miss Fortescue's place is now agreeably filled by Miss Julia Gwynne, and Miss Carlingford, in the temporary absence of the comely Miss Barnett, appears as the stately Queen of the Fairies.

The Surrey has reproduced the effective sensational drama of "Mankind; or, Beggar My Neighbour," in which Mr. George Conquest has resumed his original character of Daniel Groodge, which he plays with much ability of a distinct kind.

Under the title of "Poems for Recitation," Mr. Samuel French has issued in a collective form the stirring poetical lyrics lately written by Mr. Clement Scott, on the heroic feats our soldiers and sailors have performed within recent memory.

A decidedly martial item has been added to the programme of the Canterbury Theatre of Varieties by the revival of the well-known Military Quadrilles of the late M. Jullien. The services of pipers, fifers, drummers, and brass instrumentalists from the Household Troops and the Royal Artillery having been secured, the result has been highly satisfactory, and the performance favourably received.

Serjt.-Major Dick, formerly of the 70th Foot, and afterwards garrison serjeant-major at Guernsey, died last Saturday, in his 87th year, and was buried at St. Martin's, with military honours. The band and a firing-party of the 57th Regt. attended to pay the last tribute of respect to the veteran, as did also several officers of Regulars and Militia, including Col. Jerome, V.C., fort major and assist.-adjt.-gen., and his Excellency Major-Gen. Nelson, C.B., Lieutenant-Governor of Guernsey.

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks, avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies, are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda water, will be found the least objectionable. Eno's Fruit Salt is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the powers of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use Eno's Fruit Salt, therefore no family should ever be without it. CAUTION.—Legal Rights are protected in every Civilised Country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d. Directions, in Sixteen Languages, how to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at Eno's Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, Esq.,
Bloomsbury, London.

Dear Sir,—We embrace this opportunity of congratulating you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine, Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne, has earned for itself, not only in Hindostan, but all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported into the country, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.
Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff), discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of

BRONCHITIS,

EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,

PALPITATION, HYSTERIA, and is the true Palliative in

TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—DISEASES OF THE BOWELS.—A remedy, which has been tested and proved in a thousand different ways, capable of eradicating poisonous taints from ulcers and healing them up, merits a trial of its capacity for extracting the internal corruptions from the bowels. On rubbing Holloway's Ointment repeatedly on the abdomen, a rash appears, and as it thickens the alvine irritability subsides. Acting as a derivative, this unguent draws to the surface, releases the tender intestines from all acrid matters, and prevents inflammation, dysentery, and piles, for which blistering was the old-fashioned though successful treatment, now from its painfulness fallen into disuse, the discovery of this Ointment having proclaimed a remedy possessing equally derivative, yet perfectly painless, power

ALTIORA PETO.

Author of "Piccadilly," &c.
Illustrated, price 21s.

"Brilliant and delightful......The book is one which everybody will greedily read and greatly admire. It is the outcome of singular originality and independence......It contains enough to equip a score of ordinary novelists for the production of a score of extraordinary novels."—Athenæum.

"May be characterised as a novel of a thousand, if only for the fact that it may be read through consecutively twice, or even thrice, with augmented pleasure to the reader with every fresh perusal..... It is not as a story that 'Altiora Peto' challenges warm admiration, but as a brilliant picture of life and manners."—Spectator.

"The whole book sparkles with brilliant dialogue. It is rich in characters......It is intricate and ingenious in plot."—London Guardian.
